Frankfurt Observing Hot Dog Anniversary

Frankfurt, Germany (U.P.)—Get 1893 Chicago world's fair, where out the hot dogs and bring on the mustard. The lowly frankfurter celebrates its 100th anniversary this month.

The elongated, pork-filled, secretly-smoked product has made this city on the Main River more famous than any of its illustrious sons, including Maier Amschel Rothschild, who started his banking business here, and the poet-playwright Johann Wolfgang Goethe.

Hans Wirth, red-faced, 300-pound owner of Frankfurt's biggest frankfurter factory and a student of frankfurter history, said the German butchers guild developed the glorious sausage in 1852 for the growing force of industrial workers.

The butcher who hit on the final shape was inspired by his dog, a dachshund.

The frankfurter's big jump to international fame came at the lamb. We can't get them now but we are getting some from Persia."

Suddenly turning sad, Wirth deplored the pale, sometimes wrinkled U.S. wiener.

"It can't even be compared," he said, shaking his head. "No flavor, no texture, no snap."

Wirth exports frankfurters to Africa, South America, Australia, Portugal and the United States.

Frankfurter manufacturers keep their formula a secret. In addition to the Persian casings, Wirth would admit only that he uses nothing but finely-ground pork from electrically-killed pigs and spices prepared by a trusted cook.

"The real secret is the smoking," Wirth claimed. He refused to tell what wood he used or allow a reporter into the smoke room.

Asked if there was any chance that his competitors or he might slip in some horse meat to increase the profits, Wirth drew up to his full 300 pounds:

"Horsemeat . . . Never. We butchers are craftsmen — not chiselers."
