(Editor's note: President Mohammed Naguib granted his first interview since being returned to the presidency to Walter Collins, United Press Cairo bureau manager.)

By WALTER COLLINS

CAIRO, Egypt (UP). — Mohammed Naguib said today he bears "no rancor" toward the men who maneuvered him out of the Egyptian presidency temporarily last week.

"I freely forgive everybody," Naguib said.

"My mission is a peaceful one," the president said. "I don't care a jot for myself. All I'm interested in is Egypt's good."

Naguib said he was "very afraid of trouble" last Saturday when agitation by cavalry officers restored him to the presidency only two days after the ruling council announced he had quit because he wanted too much power.

An official spokesman for the Egyptian government said Tuesday that Naguib would exercise only nominal authority and not supreme power in his return to the presidency.

"I was apprehensive that mischievous elements — maybe some who had Communist leanings — might try to take advantage of the situation," Naguib said. "I thus deemed it my duty to resume the presidency."

Asked how he managed to return to office, the pipe-smoking general smiled.

"Perhaps you should ask the revolution council that question," Naguib said. "But it seems to me it was the 'will of the people.'"

The government spokesman emphasized Tuesday that Naguib was put back into office in order to avoid a split in the army. The council decided that in recalling Naguib, he would be president only, with Lt. Col. Gamal Abdel Nasser retaining his new status as premier and head of the council.

This first interview with a newspaper or press association reported since Naguib's restoration consisted of 40 minutes of back and forth discussion in the quiet study of former King Farouk's Abdin Palace, now Republican Palace, in the center of Cairo.

"My one aim is that the country should unite and that everything should be peaceful," Naguib said. Because of this he "deemed it my duty to resume the presidency."

As regards his Feb. 28 speech in which he envisioned a constituent assembly for Egypt and eventual return to parliamentary government, Naguib said, "I meant all I said."

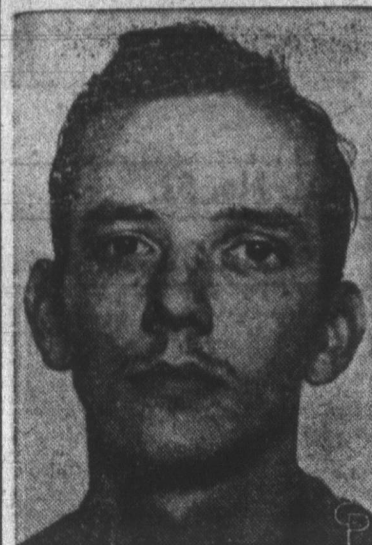

"Now we must try to prepare the way in this direction," Naguib indicated, however, he did not want to rush matters in this direction unduly.

He said he did not believe the rioters who staged death-ridden demonstrations when he arrived at Khartoum in the Sudan Sunday were anti-Egypt.

"I've formed my ideas regarding why the disorders broke out, but I'm not going to state them publicly until the Sudan government inquiry is finished," he said.

Naguib hinted Tuesday night, however, that Egypt may try to blame Britain for the rioting. In a broadcast the president said the riots could have been part of a plot to show that the Sudanese are divided in their loyalty to Egypt.

Naguib was reluctant to discuss U. S. policy in the Middle East.

Naguib said there was "nothing particularly new" in the dispute with the British over the Suez Canal Zone.

"But British minister of state Selwyn Lloyd also was staying at the governor general's house in Khartoum and on March 1 I discussed the situation with him, particularly the two outstanding points of difference."

The two outstanding points preventing agreement on British troop withdrawals from the Canal Zone are whether British technicians should wear uniforms and under what conditions the British combat base should be reactivated.

Naguib said "mutual confidence" was essential if agreement is reached between Britain and Egypt on the Suez.

Urge Protection
For Congressmen*Two Wounded Solons
Offer Suggestions

WASHINGTON UP.—Two of the house members wounded by Puerto Rican Nationalists Monday came up with their own ideas today on how congress should be protected from future gun-toting spectators.

Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts D-Ala. noted that Capitol police "check cameras but don't check guns", and suggested spectators be screened by an electric metallic detection device. He also said the personal protection of FBI agents might be necessary for members of congress.

Rep. George H. Fallon D-Mo., who like Roberts is recovering from wounds suffered during Monday's attack on congress, proposed enclosing the visitors' galleries with bullet-proof glass so "House members won't be just like sitting ducks."

House officials already were taking some security steps as a result of the shooting in which five representatives were wounded.

Guards were greatly increased. All gallery passes were taken up and members were made strictly responsible for new ones they issue to visitors.

Experts felt the metallic detection device might not be practical since it picks up any metal in pockets—not just firearms. The FBI also was believed needed more urgently elsewhere.

But the idea of a glass partition drew considerable support. Rep. Overton Brooks D-La. introduced a bill Tuesday to authorize the Capitol architect to install the bullet-proof glass enclosure. A loudspeaker system would be used to bring the proceedings into the glassed-in gallery.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon receives a floral decoration in Washington from Mrs. Joseph R. Farrington, wife of the Hawaiian delegate to Congress. Earlier, a delegation from Hawaii formally presented to Nixon a 500-foot petition signed by more than 116,000 Hawaiian residents asking for "statehood now." (International)
