

Controversy, Confusion On "New Look" Strategy

(Editor's note: Considerable controversy and confusion have surrounded the so-called "new look" defense strategy. The following dispatch tells what the new policy is, how it was evolved, and what has been said about it, pro and con.)

WASHINGTON UP — What is the Eisenhower administration's much discussed "new look" defense strategy?

Republican spokesmen have described it as a bold plan for holding Communist aggression in check throughout the world without bankrupting America in the process: a far-reaching revision of U. S. foreign policy to apply the painful lessons learned in the Korean War.

Democratic critics contend it is mostly doubletalk to cover up sharp slashes that administration economists have made in U. S. military strength.

Both sides agree on one point:

There has been much confusion and misunderstanding about the policy since it was announced by secretary of state John Foster Dulles in a New York speech Jan. 12.

Dulles said then that the United States and its allies have neither the money nor the manpower to build effective "local defenses" against Communist aggression around the entire 20,000-mile perimeter of the Communist empire.

The Communists know this, he said, and are likely to go on starting "local wars" like the one in Korea as long as they believe that the free world's response will be confined to resistance on the spot where the aggression takes place.

To prevent more Koreas, Dulles said, the free world must henceforth place less reliance on local defenses and "depend primarily upon a great capacity to retaliate, instantly, by means and at places of our choosing."

The defense budget which President Eisenhower sent to Congress a few days later translated the new concept into military terms. It put increased emphasis on air power and atomic weapons, while cutting the army's ground forces from 20 to 17 divisions and reducing the navy from 1,200 to 1,080 ships.

Says Charge Of Fake Holdup Is Nonsense LaPorte Sheriff In Fractional Fight

LaPorte, Ind. UP — Sheriff Norman Reeg today termed as "nonsense" a charge he staged a filling station holdup as a publicity stunt in his campaign for reelection.

The charge was brought by Mayor Tom Boyd in what observers called the climax of a local Republican factional fight. Boyd claimed he had the confessions of two "conspirators" to back his charge.

A court hearing was scheduled today on Boyd's petition seeking a continuance of protective custody for the two men by LaPorte police.

The men, Carter Methany, 24, and Don Wheaton, 26, near LaPorte, were captured Tuesday by Reeg and deputies during a gun battle at the filling station.

Their main point in elaborations which Dulles stressed in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Friday is that the new policy "does not mean turning every local war into a world war. It does not mean that if there is a Communist attack somewhere in Asia, atom or hydrogen bombs will necessarily be dropped on the great industrial centers of China or Russia."

What it does mean, said Dulles, is that Red aggressors are on notice that the United States no longer intends to let them pick the time, place and ground rules of every conflict; if they start trouble in an area where the free world's local defenses happen to be sparse, they may get hit back somewhere else, perhaps with A-bombs, perhaps with conventional weapons.

President Eisenhower also sought to eliminate any idea that his administration has itchy finger on the trigger of global atomic war. He told a news conference, directly, that "there is going to directly, that there is going to be no involvement of America in war unless it is a result of the constitutional process that is placed on Congress to declare it."

Prayer Band Rally At Marion Sunday

The Marion Missionary Chapel has been chosen as the site for a Victory prayer band rally Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. It was announced today by the Rev. James R. Meadows, president of the group.

The Rev. W. C. Correll, pastor of God's gospel tabernacle at Peru, will be the principal speaker and Rev. Meadows will preside. Dwight Darr of Bobo will lead the singing and there will be special prayers for the boys in our country.

Basques on the French-Spanish border have netted wood pigeons commercially for generations, says the National Geographic Society. Each fall thousands of birds fly through a narrow Pyrenees pass en route to the warm Mediterranean. Hunters hurl wooden disks in the air to imitate hawks in flight; frightened pigeons fly low for fear of falcon attacks and are trapped in nets.
