School Bus, Truck Collide Head-on

KENDALLVILLE, Ind. (INS) — Thirty-six children escaped death by inches today when their school-bound bus was struck head-on by a careening semi-trailor truck.

Seven children were taken to the McCray Memorial Hospital at Kendallville, eight miles west of the accident on U. S. 24, but all were released after treatment.

Driver of the bus, which was bound for Rome City, Ind., was Clayton Steinbarger, 55, of Rome City. He suffered only a minor knee injury.

Maynard Peterson, 26, of Sturgis, Mich., said he saw the school bus approaching and stopped his car when he noticed the bus was stopping to take on passengers.

At that moment, the truck, driven by Thomas Coss, 21, of Neapolis, O., struck Peterson's car from the rear and overturned it into a ditch, and the truck careened across the road and into the front of the bus.

Neither Peterson nor Coss suffered serious injury in the three-way crash.

Siamese Operation Proves Successful

Condition Good After Separation

CHICAGO (INS) — The separated Andrews Siamese twin girls spent a good night and were reported improved and in excellent condition today.

A Mercy hospital bulletin at 6 a. m. listed the six-month-old twins who were separated Thursday night in what may be the first completely successful operation of its kind as "in very good shape."

The blonde, blue-eyed babies — Deborah Marie and Christine Mary Andrews — who were joined at the head, were placed in cradles, small oxygen tents, following the hour and 40 minute operation as a precaution to help them in coming out of surgical shock.

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. John W. Barrett, director of hospitals for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago, reported today that the twins were in "very good condition" and sleeping peacefully "side by side in their hospital room for the first time in their lives." He added:

"Barring complications, everything looks favorable."

If both girls survive, it will mark the first time that head-joined twins have lived following separation surgery.

The Brodie Siamese twins, also joined at the head, were separated in an operation at Illinois Research Hospital in Chicago Dec. 17, 1952.

During the surgery, it was discovered that the boys shared a common sagittus sinus vein.

The vital vein was given to Rodney Dee, who has progressed satisfactorily, while his brother, Roger, died 24 days after the operation.

The Andrews twins are given a better chance for survival because each has her own sagittus sinus vein and each has a complete dura mater covering.
