Lack Interpreters For Russian Visit

Language Barrier Hampers Farm Tour

AMES, Ia. (INS) — The language barrier may be hampering the lesson that Iowa farm experts are spelling out to 12 Russian farm leaders.

Iowa officials said today they are "disturbed" over the lack of interpreters who are versed in agriculture. Technical terms employed by Iowa State college instructors in telling the Soviet agriculture experts about new developments and experiments on the farm reportedly are not getting through to the Russian visitors.

The Soviet delegation is spending a second day today at Iowa State college in Ames listening to lectures and inspecting experimental projects.

Just how much of the information is getting through to the visitors is a mystery.

C. R. Elder, Iowa State college extension director, said, "we have found it difficult to communicate freely with the Russians as we would have liked."

He is escorting the Russians around the tall corn state. Elder continued:

"We believe it is very difficult for the two state department interpreters because they don't have an agricultural education. As a result, and because of the diversified interests of the Russian delegation, we haven't been able to tell them as much as we would like to."

Government associated officials making the 35-day midwestern farm tour with the Russians have asked Washington for manpower and technical equipment to overcome the linguistic Iron Curtain.

Soviet Union Trails In Tractor Design

Find Russians 20
Years Behind U. S.

KHARKOV, Ukraine (INS) — The American farm delegation visiting Russia estimated today that the Soviet Union is 20 years behind the U. S. in farm tractor design.

The 12 member team voiced its opinion after visiting a tractor plant in Kharkov.

The Kharkov plant turns out 100 to 120 tractors daily. Most of the machines are 54 horsepower caterpillars used in general farm work while the remainder are 12-horsepower pneumatic-tired orchard and garden tractors.

Members of the delegation pointed out that the Soviet tractors lack hydraulic systems and other mechanical features which are demanded in today's American tractors.

Nixon's Brother Is Ordered To Service

Younger Brother Is Ordered To Report

YORK, Pa. (INS) — Vice President Richard M. Nixon's younger brother has been ordered by a York county draft board to report for army induction not later than Aug. 1.

The brother, Edward Calvert Nixon, 25, now lives at La Habra, Calif., but registered with the York county board in 1948 while living with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Nixon, on their farm near Menges Mills, Pa.

Nixon was residing at Whittier, Calif., when the board sent him his first induction notice last Oct. 13 but he was classified 4-F because he mangled several fingers in an accident while employed by an oil company.

He was reclassified 1-A on the basis of a recent physical examination and has been directed to report to the board nearest his home.
