Auction School:—

The Summer term of Reppert's nationally famous Auction School opened in Decatur today. Dean of the school, Q. R. Chaffee and President Roland Reppert were on hand to start the embryo auctioneers on the road to success. The three-weeks of intensive training, plus the several books included in the course, have had phenomenal results. More than seventy-five percent of the Reppert graduates have been successful, over the years. The faculty of the Decatur school is second to none in the nation and each summer and winter term turns out an average of 150 auctioneers who return to their communities in every state in the nation and every province of Canada and start high-paying and successful businesses of their own. The Daily Democrat joins the citizens of Decatur in welcoming another Reppert class. We invite the visitors to use our city parks and attend our Churches. We also invite the students and faculty members to visit Decatur retail stores where they will find the best values in merchandise. We sincerely hope every student enjoys his visit and his work in Decatur.

Now they are working on the turkey to develop more white meat. Why not do some thing to make the steer produce more Porterhouse steaks?

We envy all you fellows who can get out in the fresh air these days and enjoy a vacation. It's the best medicine you can have and produces more good health than any remedies we know.

Ike says the G.O.P. can remain in power forever if they stand for just what the people want, make no mistakes and don't "sell out." In other words if they had wings they could be angels.

J. Edgar Hoover declines a job as Police Commissioner of the city of New York. We would judge that as quite a come down when he is now the director of the entire USA. We think New York is still included in the territory.

Vice-president Nixon seems to be promoting a trip to Russia in October or November. It is to be a good will journey similar to the one he made to the far east a few years ago and the one to Latin America later. Senator Knowland sees some danger in such a trip, especially on the eve of a presidential election. To the average citizen, it sounds like a nice trip for the VP but perhaps a dangerous one. We are not yet convinced of the sincerity of the Soviet nations.

The satellite, which is to cost ten million dollars and circle the world in an hour and a half is a little speedy for us old folks. What will you do with it? Do they figure on making them a little larger, spend a few hundred million bucks and then see if a human can live in such a modern machine? Well it won't be ready for a couple of years so we can breathe easier in these fast moving and fast living days.

The vacation season is in full blast and hundreds of Decatur people are on their way or planning to get under full steam soon. Be sure to notice as you drive around the country in every direction, how great is the building boom and how wonderful the progress of industry. This is probably the peak which we have approached the last twenty years. Predictions are that the big boom will go on through the autumn and winter but will probably level off next spring.

According to the Wall Street Journal, the G.O.P. politicians are seriously planning the admission of Chinese Communists into the United Nations but have put it off because of the coming election and to give China a chance to become "respectable." How will it all come out? Maybe some crazy man will touch off a giant atom bomb one of these days and the world will have to start all over again!

Modern Etiquette

Q. When one who is a house guest finds it necessary to make a long-distance telephone call, who should pay the charges?

A. The guest should immediately call the operator upon completion of the call and ask for the charges. This amount should then be given to the hostess.

Q. When accompanying a woman to the dinner table, should the man sit down exactly at the same time she does?

A. No. He should draw out her chair first, and not sit down until immediately after she is seated.

Q. Is it necessary that the husband of the matron-of-honor at a wedding be asked to serve as an usher?

A. No; this is not necessary.

THE BOSS OF BROKEN SPUR

By Nick Summer

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR
KERRY was happy enough to feel tolerant even toward Cameron. The sandy-haired rancher greeted him with his usual self-possessed courtesy. "Didn't expect to see you back so soon. Not exactly the kind of home-comin' you expected, I reckon."

"I expected worse," Kerry retorted. "Thought I'd find Broken Spur swarming with fire-breathing nesters with knives in their teeth." Christie squeezed his arm hard, and he pressed his hand over hers, not caring who saw it. "You've got to admit they've had some provocation," Cameron said softly. "Larrabee was a good man."

"He was," Kerry agreed. "I hope they find the man that shot him." "Your sheriff doesn't seem to be doing much."

"Hear there's talk among the nesters about taking the law into their own hands. You heard anything about that?"

"They'd hardly tell me, would they?" Cameron shrugged. "I'm a cattleman."

"How are you making out in the cattle business?"

Cameron shrugged again. "I'll get by, I reckon." He smiled at the girl. "No fault of Christie's if I don't. She's helped me all she could."

"Christie's always ready to lend a neighbor a hand," Kerry agreed blandly. "By the way, I ran into a friend of yours in Dodge. Fellow named Calder."

"That so? I haven't seen old Lon in years. Hope he's well."

"He seemed to be in good health last time I saw him," Kerry replied with a touch of grimace. "He thinks mighty highly of you."

"We swung a couple of deals together, back in the old days. We were lucky. Lon always gave me credit."

"I got the idea," Kerry murmured, "the only deals he was interested in were pasteborders."

"He's turned his hand to a lot of things. Heard he'd taken to gambling for a livin'. Too bad," Cameron sighed. "He was a smart fella. Could've amounted to something, but he just couldn't settle."

"Some men are that way," Kerry assented gravely.

"At least," Cameron said, "Lon had the sense to stay single. Some of 'em don't. Don't know anything much sadder than a woman tied to that kind of driftin' man."

He spoke with a mild, philosophic regret that no one could have called personal, yet Kerry found his tolerance for the man wearing thin. Because he didn't want to be drawn into an argument on this day, he decided it would be the part of discretion to clear out; so he got up with a word about having work to do.

That brought him a quick smile of approval from Christie, and a look in answer to his "See you soon" that left him, for once, unconcerned at leaving the field to Cameron.

There was no talk for some time after he had gone.

"You're looking mighty pretty, Christie," Cameron said. "Not that there's anything unusual about that," he added, "but there's something special about you today—a sort of shine. You can slap my face, if I'm talkin' outta turn," he smiled apologetically. "but has Rioridan comin' back got anything to do with that?"

"Everything to do with it," she assured him. She wanted the world to know how she felt.

Cameron turned his hat round and round on his knee, studying it with a sober absorption. "Christie," he said slowly, "I haven't known you very long, an' maybe I haven't the right to say it, but in this little while you've got to be awfully important to me. There isn't anything I wouldn't do for you."

"You've been a good friend, Wayne," she assured him.

"I hope you think so. I hope you think of me as a friend that—doesn't want to see you get hurt."

"You think I'm likely to get hurt? I'm pretty well able to take care of myself, Wayne."

"Sure you are. But you got so much pride, Christie. If you loved a man an' he let you down—Oh, I reckon I better keep my mouth shut."

"Wayne, for pity's sake, if you've got something to say, say it."

"It's not the kind of thing a man likes to tell about another man, but—Lon Calder, my friend in Dodge City that Rioridan was talkin' about—I had a letter from him lately."

He knew Rioridan came from around here, an' he mentioned it thinkin' I might know him. He was run outta Dodge on account of some row over a saloon girl."

He didn't remind her of what had happened in Sundown the night before Kerry left home. He didn't have to. Her own mind made the connection, and there was no denying it hit home. Next minute she was ashamed. She'd doubted Kerry once, and just now found out how wrong she'd been. She wasn't going to doubt him again on the second-hand word of a stranger.

"Anything I need to know about Kerry, I'll get from him. Anger with herself made her voice colder than she'd meant it to be. Cameron's hands closed around her arms as she started to turn away.

"Don't be mad at me, Christie. You asked me to tell you." His hands tightened, pulling her toward him. Something demanding on ice until ready for use. This will preserve them for several days. Of course they should be washed immediately before using.

Sash Cords

Before installing the new sash cords, soak them in boiled linseed oil, then allow them to dry thoroughly, and they will last indefinitely.

Flies

To keep flies out of the pantry, sponge the windows once or twice a week with a weak solution of carbonic acid and water.

Hoosier Heat Wave Claims Eight Lives

INDIANAPOLIS (INS) Hoosiers hoped today that scattered thunderstorms predicted for today and Tuesday would relieve slightly the long heat wave which already has claimed eight lives.

However, the Indianapolis weather bureau again sang its monotonous song, "hot and humid." Marks in the high nineties were recorded over the state during the week end.
