Eisenhower Works During Vacation

Official Actions At Vacation Spot

FRASER, Colo. (INS) — President Eisenhower is finding out once again at his Rocky Mountain fishing camp how hard it is for the President of the United States to take a vacation.

He is staying at secluded Byer's Peak Ranch Tuesday determined to get a complete rest as far as possible from the grueling routine of the White House.

Wednesday, the first full day of his "vacation," he took these official actions, working on a card table in his cabin:

1. Approved a new code of conduct for American prisoners of war, aimed at combatting Communism.

2. Appointed a new ambassador, national security expert Robert H. Thayer, to Communist Romania.

3. Signed a treaty with Panama and a proclamation that was the last formal step in U.S. approval of admitting a sovereign West Germany to the European defense alliance.

4. Accepted the resignation of one of his appointees, Archie A. Alexander, who has been under fire for his policies as governor of the Virgin Islands.

5. Appointed a new judge, John J. Cashin, to the federal bench in New York.

The astonishing thing is that Mr. Eisenhower also found time to catch close to his limit of trout, including a 17-inch, work on an oil painting of the Rockies; hit out some practice golf balls and serve as chief cook at the fishing camp.
