It's October, a wonderful month, so enjoy it and don't worry too much about Christmas which is still some ten weeks away.

Now they really have us jumping sideways, claiming the jet-controlled car is just around the corner, but they fail to tell us what corner.

That old New York stock exchange keeps bobbing around like it was a little sick or expected to be. A little settling down for a while might be the best thing that could happen.

You have until October 10 to register to be eligible to vote in the November 8 municipal election. You must re-register if you have changed your precinct since the last election.

The 241-mile Ohio turnpike is open and drivers are invited to use it at 65 miles an hour in passenger cars and 50 miles in trucks saving three hours on the trip, probably worth the extra fare you pay for tolls. It will soon exist all across Indiana also and is expected to go on West across the nation. It's an era of fast paces and a lot of folks are enjoying it.

Business leaders held an important meeting recently and decided what this nation will be in twenty years from now. They decided the population of the USA will be some 215-million. Eighty million will be employed but will work six hours less than now and receive 25% more per hour for their labors. We will have 92 million TV sets and other luxuries that cost some money. Predictions were put in a capsule and placed in the foundation of a new building in New Jersey. When they are dug up we hope we are not enjoying one of our depressions which might make the guesses look silly.

There is a certain piece of equipment being used on the city streets which was sent here for a demonstration more than six weeks ago. We're not going to mention the name, but we'd like to know if the board of works has committed itself to the purchase of this $10,000 beauty. If it's still here on a demonstration basis, it's the longest demonstration we've ever heard of. It has been purchased, without proper legal procedure, then the proper investigating authorities should look into the matter. When bids were taken recently on this costly object, the demonstrator was not the low bidder. If the law pertaining to purchases is followed, the matter must come before the council for appropriation of the money. What strange system do the third terms have?

Robert D. Cole:

The Democratic candidate for Mayor of Decatur at the November 8 municipal election is Robert D. Cole, a native of Decatur. The candidate is a graduate of Decatur high school and has resided in Decatur his entire life. Operator of Cole's meat market on Monroe street, Mr. and Mrs. Cole and their son and daughter reside in Stratton Place. He has never sought a public office, but always has been active in civic affairs of the community and interested in the operation of the various parts of municipal government. The Coles are members of the Zion Evangelical and Reformed church. "I believe that the functions and operations of a city government should be on a sound and economic basis, with a view to administering the affairs of the people in the same manner as a prosperous private business," the candidate said recently. "I believe that the people have a right to know what the city officials, boards and commissions are doing with their money, and if elected, I assure you that all of Decatur's business will be carried on openly. I shall always be glad to receive and consider comment and criticism from every resident of Decatur." This is the statement on which Mr. Cole seeks the top job in Decatur's government. The candidate is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Cole and descends from a long line of active and civic minded Decaturites. He has already started a thorough canvass of voters in the city and has stated that he will make an effort to call at every home. We can without reservations commend Robert Cole to the people as the Democratic candidate for Mayor.

Modern Etiquette

Q. How should a woman be governed about rising from her chair to show respect to an older woman?
A. In most cases, she should rise for a woman more than double her own age. Much depends, of course, upon the "older woman." Older women who are trying to appear very young might resent any obvious show of deference. Old-fashioned, comfortably older women, on the other hand, would probably like it very much.
Q. When setting the table for dinner guests, where should the napkins be placed, if not directly on the plates?
A. At the left of the plates.
Q. Should a man use his right or left hand when tipping his hat to a woman?
A. Either hand.

Household Scrapbook

Washing a Corsetette
Spread the corsetette out flat and scrub with a brush and warm soapy water. Then rinse immediately in warm water and spread it out in the sun to dry, or hang it straight from the line. The main thing is that it must dry quickly to prevent rusting.
Mattress
A mattress should be turned every week. This prevents it from wearing unevenly, prolongs its life and makes it far more comfortable.
Raw Onions
Cultivate the habit of eating raw onions. They have a very beneficial effect on the liver.

73-Year-Old Woman Held As Arsonist

INDIANAPOLIS (INS) — A 73-year-old woman is slated for trial Friday on charges of trying to set fire to the Claypool hotel in Indianapolis.
Mrs. Ruth Ann Dobbs is charged with swiping a lantern from a nearby construction project, littering the hallway in the rear of the lobby with trash and setting fire to it.

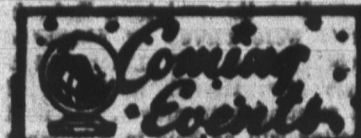

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

THE SISTERS at the hospital indeed jumped at the offer of Ann's help; they indicated that they would use as many hours as Ann might want to give them. Right now they were short handed in the lab, and if she could keep records...

Less than a week later she found herself taking a station wagon full of lab and X-ray personnel down the highway for a picnic near Bernalillo. There was a certain irrigation ditch there, with a grove of trees. They'd brought food, some prepared, some to cook.
The group was an odd assortment. There were the lab girls, the doctor-pathologist, the white-crowned Sisters and Ann in her pretty green play suit.
They put the car in a convenient place, and decided to explore the Pueblo which had recently been the victim of modern science. Ann herself recalled that disastrous day, and the stories told by these new friends increased its vividness.
Clouds had rolled across their famous blue sky, lightning had flashed, rain had come down—not just the usual brief squall, but a downpour that lasted for hours. An unheard-of thing on the mesa. In Albuquerque, they said people had run to the churches to pray—arroyos had gushed with white floods, the Santa Fe right-of-way had carried a river which had broken through the dike and poured across this Pueblo, dissolving the adobe walls into their original mud. And now the place stood deserted and forlorn. What had been houses—hogans—for years and years, now sat melted like chocolate candies exposed to the sun.
"Scientists or no," declared Sister Charles, "you cannot interfere with the ways of God. He put the desert in this place; the rain makers should be restrained!"
Dr. Jungers reared her mildy, and she teased perkily.
The irrigation ditch made a fine place for their picnic; its banks afforded shelter from the wind, and the aspens gave them twigs to burn.
Ann had brought only a sweater, and Sister Gertrude asked if she was not cold.
"A little," said Ann ruefully. "I should have worn my longies."
"Ha!" declared the tall religious. "I venture to say that I'm the only one here who's ever worn the things."
"And I!" claimed Sister Charles. "Well, I didn't know," retorted Sister Gertrude. "You're rather vain about your figure."

That, of course, was a great joke. Sister Charles was as round as a ball.
But she was the best of them all at the game of baseball in which they engaged before cooking lunch. She could pitch and she could hit. Finally she socked a ringing homer, and the feminine cheers were augmented by two hearty masculine voices. Not Dr. Jungers—he was busy with the fire.
The girls and the Sisters looked up, startled at the two young men who were seated on the ditch edge, swinging their boots and grinning. In fatigues, it was hard to tell about their rank. They were Air Force, the tall one said, from Kirtland. Lt. Riley—Chuck—and Sgt. Dunning—like. They seemed to be stuck. His thumb jerked over his shoulder. They'd seen the station wagon and wondered if they could ask for a push.
He was an engaging chap with a deep scar along one cheek. Ann was brought forward as "a station wagon owner, and the young men's eyes brightened. "Hello, Ann," they acknowledged the introduction.
"I'll be glad to push you," she said.
"Can you drive pretty well?" asked the young pilot.
"Well," she retorted. "I came down here without getting stalled." That made the sergeant roar, and the girls all joined in.
"We're just about ready to cook lunch," said Sister Charles. "If you boys..."
"Don't ever offer a serviceman food, ma'am," drawled the sergeant. "Without a thick towel wrapped around your hand."
Ann had a minute to realize that Dr. Bates' prescription was working. Certainly she was out of her "mood." In fact, she was having a wonderful time. Two or three of the lab girls were more than pretty, but none got more flattering attention than Ann. The young lieutenant filled her plate, and sat beside her.
"Think nothing of it," razzed the sergeant. "He simply cannot resist a Chrysler."
It was all young, and foolish, and carefree. They ate hungrily; they laughed and sang.
"For miles around," declared Dr. Jungers, "the hens will stop laying, and the cows won't give milk." The sergeant offered to tell how he got his scar, but was restrained by his companion. "If necessary, I'll pull a little rank," the lieutenant said, smiling.
"Well," said Sister Gertrude
