Study Accidents To Hospital Patients

Many Hospital Beds Are Termed Unsafe

BY DELOS SMITH
United Press Science Editor
NEW YORK, March 20 (UP)—An analytical study of hospital patient accidents revealed that the most frequently occurring type was that of the patient falling out of bed.

"Many currently used hospital beds are obviously unsafe," said the scientific investigators. "Most beds are too high for a patient to get in and out of bed without risking a fall and subsequent injury."

New York's huge Mount Sinai, one of the nation's model general hospitals, submitted its records for one year to Dr. Henry M. Parrish, a specialist in epidemiological studies and his statistician associate, Thomas P. Weil.

614 Accidents

In a typical year at Mount Sinai there were 614 patient accidents. In that year there were 23,911 patients, so the annual incidence was 25.7 accidents per 1,000 patients. The rate of other hospitals certainly would be no less, and on this basis the scientists estimated that 300,000 to 550,000 accidents befall American hospital patients in any given year.

Side Rails

But in addition to hospital beds, they considered the "side rails" which can be added to hospital beds to prevent patients from rolling off them, as "not safety designed." Of the 283 falls from beds, 106 occurred when the side rails were in place.

They also felt that tubes used to assure patients of airways should always be made of rubber rather than of metal. Among the accidents were chipped and broken teeth due to metal airways.

"Many accidents involving wheel chairs and crutches could have been prevented by instructing patients on how to use them properly," they continued. "Personnel should assist elderly, crippled and senile patients to the bathroom and to bed more often. Proper measures should be taken after each patient accident to prevent other episodes."
