It was decided that the next meeting will be declared guest night and will be held at the home of Mrs. Edward Marbach, with Mrs. Norvin Thieme as co-hostess. Singing of the club prayer closed the meeting.

The Wabash Valley club was hostess for the affair and served the banquet. The tables were attractively decorated in an autumn motif. Table centerpieces were made of bark and filled with gourds, corn, nuts, etc.

Devotions for the evening were under the charge of Mrs. Bert Haley. She read portions of Psalms 19, excerpts from "Wealth of the Universe," and offered prayer.

Inform Pasternak Of Nobel Award

No Information On Award Acceptance

MOSCOW (UPI) — Russian authorities gave non-conformist author Boris Pasternak the official notification of his Nobel Prize today but there was no indication he would be able to accept it.

But in an interview he made it plain he wants to.

"This is a great joy for me," he told United Press International.

The official Swedish message informing Pasternak of his selection as recipient of the 1958 Nobel Prize for literature—and inviting him to Stockholm to accept the $41,000 prize in person—was finally delivered this morning. The award was announced Thursday.

It had been stated officially Thursday night that the acceptance of the prize would depend on the Soviet writers union.

But speaking to this correspondent at his telephone-less home outside Moscow, Pasternak made it plain he would like to accept the invitation to next month's presentation.

"If I travel to Stockholm," he said, "at least I will have a month and a half before hand to relax and rest."

Pasternak's prize-winning book, "Doctor Zhivago," has been banned in Russia on the ground it is anti-Communist. The book itself is regarded in the West as an indictment of the Communist system.

More Areas Return To Standard Time

CHICAGO (UPI) — Time will stand still for an hour Sunday morning when areas of the nation still on daylight savings time turn back the clock.

The change is set for 2 a.m. local time.

Areas reverting to standard time include 500 communities in Illinois, including Chicago; New York, Pennsylvania; Massachusetts; Rhode Island; Maine; New Hampshire; Delaware; Connecticut; Vermont; New Jersey; Maryland; parts of northern Ohio, including Cleveland and Youngstown; Washington, D.C.; a few communities in Virginia; the Missouri area around St. Louis; parts of northern Kentucky, including Louisville; and some parts of eastern Canada east of Sault Ste. Marie, and northwest Indiana near Chicago.

Other areas in the nation observed the last Sunday in September as the end of daylight time.

Indiana presented the most confusing picture, since a number of cities in the eastern part of the state have voted themselves into the eastern time belt. They stay on central daylight time the year around.

Bribery Case Motion Is Under Advisement

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — Special Judge Horace C. Holmes, Tipton, had under advisement today a motion to strike out parts of bribery indictments against three Carpenters' Union officials.

Holmes recently overruled a motion to quash the indictments in the Indiana highway scandals.

The indictments charged Maurice A. Hutcheson, Frank M. Chapman and O. William Blaier with bribing former right-of-way assistant director Harry A. Doggett in highway land deals.

Airlines Strike Is Scheduled Oct. 31

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — About 6,700 employees who service domestic and international flights of Trans World Airlines will go on strike Oct. 31, the International Association of Machinists has announced.

The union said Thursday the strike was set after 14 months of negotiations failed to bring agreement. Principal issues involved consolidation of several work classifications and re-evaluation of several work functions.

Science, Religion Unusually Similar

Approach To Truth Is Notably Similar

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International

Science and religion are "remarkably similar" in their approach to truth.

That is the conclusion of Dr. William G. Pollard, one of the few men in the world who qualifies as a professional in both fields.

Pollard is a distinguished atomic physicist who serves, on weekdays, as executive director of the Institute of Nuclear Studies at Oak Ridge, Tenn. Since 1954 he has also been an ordained Episcopal minister, serving as priest-in-charge of St. Francis Church at Norris, Tenn.

His dual experience has made Pollard acutely aware of a contrast in popular attitudes toward science and religion.

"People think of science as an objective body of knowledge that can be 'demonstrated' to be true," he said in an interview. "They think of religion as a private, subjective experience that has to be 'taken on faith'."

The Same Way

To Pollard, this reflects the "special prejudices of our contemporary culture" rather than any inherent difference in the "fundamental characteristics" of scientific and religious truth.

"It is difficult to 'demonstrate' to a non-scientist even the elementary principles of physics," he said. "If a person really wants to prove to himself the truth of the whole structure of physics, there is only one way to do it. He must take the long, hard, disciplined route of becoming a physicist. Otherwise, he is simply taking on faith the validity of the insights that are shared by those on the inside of the community of physics."

"It's precisely the same way with Christianity. The only way to prove its truth is to become a Christian — a full Christian, deeply involved in the church, under its discipline, sharing its life. Then the truth of it breaks through."

Ebbing Rapidly

Pollard knows that many people who would unhesitatingly accept his findings as a physicist will be skeptical of his findings as a Christian.

"This is part of the mind-set of our age," he said. "We have been conditioned for nearly two centuries to accept uncritically the idea that science has a more reliable access to reality than religion."

Pollard believes this prejudice against religion which has dominated intellectual circles since the 18th Century has begun to ebb rapidly.

"Everywhere I go," he said, "I run into scientists and university professors who have followed the same path I did into the Christian faith — not because of any cataclysmic personal crisis, but simply because they have found in it the ultimate answers to man's deepest questions."

Can Be Believed

To further this "renaissance," Pollard said, the Christian church should concentrate on proclaiming its Gospel, not as something that modern man should believe, but as something he can believe.

"There are millions of people who are ready to acknowledge that Christianity may be admirable and helpful, but who do not believe it is true," he said.

"They find it quite shocking that we Christians should claim that Almighty God, the creator of the nebulae and the galaxies, actually came down from heaven at a particular point in history, and for us men and our salvation was made man."

"They say, 'Of course, you don't really mean that. — not anything less. And the really astounding thing is that those who have tested this shocking claim, in the only way it can be tested, are absolutely certain that it is true.'"

105th Convention Of Teachers Closes

Ball State Teacher Elected President

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — The Indiana State Teachers Association closes its 105th annual convention today with speeches and panel discussions on educational problems.

The delegates elected Dr. Earl A. Johnson, head of the Education Department of Ball State Teachers College at Muncie, as president and Mrs. Reka Matthews, Franklin High School teacher, as vice president Thursday.

They also adopted resolutions urging a greater distribution of funds from the state for financing schools, higher salaries for teachers, and changing the office of state superintendent of public instruction from an elective to an appointive position.

Johnson succeeds Miss Audrey Shauer, Valparaiso, as president, and Mrs. Matthews succeeds George McReynolds, Lawrenceburg, as vice president.

William Decker, Vincennes, continues as treasurer, and Robert L. Wyatt, Indianapolis, executive secretary.

Among today's speakers was a top national consultant on school financing.

Dr. Edgar L. Morphet, a native of Indiana, now professor of education at the University of California, was to outline what he considers the good bad points of Indiana's present school financing and also the proposed plan prepared by the Governor's Study Commission on School Aid Distribution.

The California educator was consultant to the commission when it discussed proposed 1959 legislation.

Morphet is known to view the school financing plans of New York, Ohio, Florida and Utah as good examples. He also has praised the Governor's Study Commission because it brings together many different groups interested in education and does not confine the solution to educators only, or businessmen only.

The present Indiana system has local property taxes providing approximately 73 per cent of the cost of Indiana's schools, a burden which several groups will seek to have lessened during the next General Assembly.

Morphet will be joined by Burley Becholdt, director of research for the Indiana State Teachers Association; Alex Jardine, superintendent of South Bend schools; Jack A. Russell, Evansville North High School teacher; William E. Wilson, Clark County school superintendent, and Supt. John J. Young, Mishawaka in panel talks on school financing.

The Friday morning program also spotlighted another major school problem—the place of public schools in science instruction.

Paul Klinge, coordinator of school science at Indiana University, was aided by this panel in considering possible curriculum changes.

Nathaniel Ober, Clayton, Mo., school principal; B.R. Stanerson, assistant secretary, American Chemical Society, Washington, D.C., and Dr. John R. Shilling, deputy director, Division of Biology and Agriculture, Atomic Energy Commission, Washington.

Some 20,000 teachers crowded the capital city for the two-day convention.

Simultaneously, another 12,000 were attending division meetings of the ISTA at Evansville, South
