The Rev. Fredrick Pfingst read the double ring vows in a room decorated with fall flowers. Members of the immediate families were present.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of chintilly lace over satin. The bodice featured a scalloped scoop neckline and short sleeves, and her circular skirt came to ballerina length. Miss Steffen's fingertip veil of imported illusion was caught to a half hat of tulle sprinkled with pearls, and she carried a cascade arrangement of white roses and greenery.

Miss Mabel Steffen, sister of the bride, was maid of honor in a pink chiffon over taffeta dress. The lace bodice was sleeveless and had a rounded high neckline. Her pink velvet headress held a shoulder length veil and she carried a cascade arrangement of white carnations.

Attending his brother as best man was Walter Zaugg.

Stevenson Chats With Khrushchev

CHICAGO (UPI)—Adlai Stevenson said today he believes Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev is willing to negotiate for an inspection program for world disarmament.

Stevenson had a farmyard chat with Khrushchev at Coon Rapids, Iowa Wednesday — a conference which brought the first hint that a turning point might have been reached in the premier's U.S. tour and that he would be willing to take part in negotiations for a disarmament inspection program. In a brief statement today, Stevenson said he thought Khrushchev "is serious and wants to reduce the burdened nature of armaments step by step with simultaneous inspection and control appropriate to each step."

"At least his proposals should be carefully considered and not dismissed as propaganda," Stevenson, twice Democratic candidate for president, talked with Khrushchev in the relaxed atmosphere of a farm lunch party. He told newsmen later he was more encouraged at the possibility of arms agreement than at any time since his talks with the Russian leader in Moscow a year ago.

Khrushchev proposed in a United Nations speech last week that the world proceed to disarm its armies, navies and air forces in the next four years. Western statesmen immediately raised the question of international inspection — not touched on in Khrushchev's address but considered by the United States as essential to any disarmament agreement. Stevenson said he believed Khrushchev was ready to try to reach agreement.

Khrushchev himself made the first disclosure that he and Stevenson had been talking hard subjects at the cornfield party.

Asked what he and Stevenson had been discussing, he said: "We talked about our hopes for doing away with the great arms burden that presses so hard on the world." Then he turned to Stevenson and asked: "Right?"

"Right," Stevenson replied. "We decided that the people want to be friendly and it doesn't make much difference whether they are capitalists or Communists," Khrushchev said, turning again to ask Stevenson "Right?" Stevenson again agreed.

Stevenson said he believed Khrushchev had had a good opportunity to "see the peaceful state of the American mind" and that it was "possible" this education in America had changed his cold war attitude in some degree.
