Heaviest Rainfall Of Year In State

United Press International

The new year's heaviest rainfall pelted Indiana today and set the stage for what could be record-breaking high temperatures.

Nearly 1½ inches of rain fell at South Bend during a 24-hour period ending near dawn today, and other upstate weather stations recorded moderate amounts, including .81 of an inch at Fort Wayne.

Elsewhere, the precipitation was very light and mostly in drizzle form. Foggy conditions prevailed.

Forecasts called for temperatures in the 60s today and Tuesday over the southern two-thirds of Hoosierland, with indications the peak readings might reach or surpass those of Dec. 27, when all-time highs for the date were recorded.

The rain appeared to have invaded the state for a lengthy stay. Forecasts called for light to heavy rain today, lightest in the south and heaviest in the extreme northwest.

More rain was expected Wednesday and Thursday, largely on a scattered shower basis.

The mercury hit 63 at Evansville Monday, far above the readings at peak points elsewhere. At South Bend, the high was only 36, at Fort Wayne 37, at Indianapolis 43.

Overnight lows ranged from 32-freezing at Fort Wayne to 50 at Evansville.

Today's highs will range from 48 to 55 in the north to 60 to 67 in the south, tonight's lows from 42 to 48 in the north to the 50s in the south, and Wednesday's highs from the low 50s north to the mid 60s south.

The unusually mild temperatures and rain forecasts were a sharp contrast to conditions farther north. In a special bulletin, the Weather Bureau warned of freezing rain with very hazardous highways in northern sections of Michigan, Wisconsin and Ohio.
