Political Leaders

On TV Show Tonight

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—The most unusual cast in TV history can be seen tonight when Vice President Richard Nixon, Sen. John Kennedy, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and Adlai Stevenson "star" on the same show.

These four political leaders will appear on the "Ford Starline" (NBC-TV) show to agree on a single theme:

"Get out and vote."
It may be the first and last time the distinguished gentlemen agree on anything until after the November elections.

Responsible for lining up this array of "talent" is producer, Dore Schary, an active Democrat, who personally supervised and wrote the hour-long program titled, "Well, What about You?"

"The show is free of partisan politics," Schary explained. "It's perfectly balanced and fair to everyone."

"I wrote the individual statements for everyone except Governor Rockefeller who insisted on saying things his own way. And I must admit he did a fine job."

How did Schary go about signing up his stars?
He began with Kennedy and Stevenson, both personal friends of the producer. They agreed to the idea readily. Next he contacted Vice President Nixon's office, and was told the vice president would go along. At first Rockefeller's advisors refused, but later came around.

"We taped the individual segments over a period of about two weeks," Schary said. "They were most cooperative."

"Mr. Stevenson will read an editorial from Walt Whitman. Senator Kennedy will quote from Mark Twain, and Vice President Nixon reads a statement from Teddy Roosevelt. Governor Rockefeller speaks for himself."

"I think their brief talks will be most effective in getting out the vote. Each segment was made individually. They do not appear together."

The balance of the show is filled with such entertainers as Eddie Albert, Polly Bergen, Mike Wallace, Marion Anderson and Fred Clark.
