Bigger Corn Crop Forecast In State

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Agriculture Department predicted today that Indiana would replace the Cornhusker State of Nebraska this year as the nation's No. 3 corn-producing state.

In its first 1960 estimate of corn production, the department forecast a $45,117,000 bushel Hoosier crop, nearly 9 million bushels greater than the 1959 crop.

Indiana and South Dakota were the only two states among the 10 leading corn states for which a bigger corn crop was predicted.

At the same time, the department lowered the winter wheat estimate for Indiana by 1,254,000 bushels to 42,240,000 bushels. However, Indiana would move from ninth to seventh in the production of winter wheat if the estimates hold up.

Such a crop would be nearly 10 million bushels greater than 1959 production of 32,630,000 bushels.

Iowa and Illinois traditionally are the first and second place corn growers. Iowa production was expected to fall off by 132 million bushels this year.

Of course, Indiana's ending up in third place in corn production depends on future monthly estimates holding up to harvest time while Nebraska's keep pace with the first estimate.

The Indiana production would represent a 63-bushel per acre yield, equalling the record for the state set in 1958 and nearly matched last year when the harvest was 62 bushels per acre.
