Fear Religious Issue To Kill School Plans

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Concerned lawmakers in both the Senate and House looked today for a way to keep the religious issue from killing President Kennedy's entire federal school aid program.

As pressure mounted in the public-private school aid dispute, differing proposals were advanced to separate loans to private and parochial schools from grants to public schools.

But the situation remained so muddled that the only agreement seemed to be that aid to education of any kind is in serious trouble.

The religious issue appeared likely to come up today at the Senate education subcommittee's hearings on Kennedy's $2.3 billion proposal to help states pay teachers and build schools.

Hears Religious Groups
The subcommittee scheduled testimony from Baptist, Unitarian and Masonic groups. It will hear Roman Catholic spokesmen next week.

Chairman Adam Clayton Powell, D-N.Y., of the House Education and Labor Committee proposed his solution late Thursday.

Declaring that under present circumstances Kennedy's aid request was doomed, Powell suggested separate legislation to authorize loans to private and parochial schools from the elementary to college levels.

Powell, minister of one of the nation's largest Baptist congregations in Harlem, said he would support such a bill unless his legal advisers convinced him it would be unconstitutional.

He told a news conference he leaned to the contention that such loans would not violate the constitutional ban on federal aid to religious groups. But he emphasized that committee lawyers were divided on the question and were still studying it.

Senate Proposal Differs
Powell's approach "to clear the air" differed from that of Sen. Joseph S. Clark Jr., D-Pa., a member of the Senate subcommittee.

Clark proposed inserting a three-year, $305 million loan program for private schools into the general school aid bill.

Clark, a Protestant, won the support of Sen. Philip Hart, D-Mich., a Catholic, Thursday. But Sen. Pat McNamara, D-Mich., another Catholic, said he couldn't commit himself for it now.

Both Hart and McNamara supported a similar proposal last year. Kennedy was the only Catholic senator to oppose it when the proposal was narrowly defeated.

Powell said his plan was to send a separate loan bill to the House in advance of the general and college aid measures. Senate subcommittees have scheduled separate hearings next week on the pending aid bills.

Balladeers Please Crowd At Concert

By COLLEEN HELLER

Josef Marais and Miranda, international balladeers, entertained the crowd at the fourth of the current series of Civic Music Association programs at the Decatur Youth and Community Center Thursday evening.

With Marais accompanying on the classical guitar, the baritone and soprano duo presented a diversified selection of folk songs from around the world. Marais introduced each ballad by telling a little of its history, and while the presentation was not loud and blaring, most of the songs were swift and lively.

The duo, who are man and wife, opened the program with a pair of English folk songs, "Chow Willy," and "The Jolly Broom Man." Since St. Patrick's Day is near at hand, a substitution was made on the original schedule, and "Farewell to Bell O'Shannon" was included. The first portion of the evening's entertainment was concluded with five songs from the lowlands of western Europe, including "Tobacco," "Keep A-Roving," and "Beside the Windmill," from the Netherlands, "Street Cries," from France and Holland, and "The Grindstone Man," from Belgium.

The dark continent of Africa furnished the next five presentations. "Dust Upon the Roadway," "Woyele-Yele," a boating chant from Lake Tanganyika, "Native Minstrel Song," and "When It Rains," were all Bantu folk songs, while South Africa was represented by "A Bunch of Feathers."

The only American folk-song in the regular program was "On Top of Old Smokey," which was performed in the quiet and sad manner the words imply, instead of the popular loud and happy version. As a special request for the many attenders from Berne, the pair brought the crowd to the intermission with the Swiss ballad, "The Farmer of Brienz."

Two solos by Marais, the Scottish tune "The Laird O' Cockpen," and a Ukrainian song, "My Boat Is Drifting," opened the third portion of the evening's program. These were followed by three French numbers, which included "Cool Running Water," "The Small Husband," and "Wine of Gaul."

South Africa was the scene of the end of the tour of the world via the folk-song as the couple sang "There's Cape Cart," "Pretty Kitty," and "Train to Kimberley."

Two encores were immediately requested, and they were the Swiss ballad, "Vodel With Me," and an American folk-song, "Go Tell Aunt Rosie." The two performers left the stage, but were again requested to return and this time ended the singing with the hillbilly tune, "Cripple Creek."

Many of the ballads on the program by the modern minstrels have been recorded in various albums. The two have been performing together since 1946, one year before their marriage. An informal reception in the Community Center was held following the program.

The final concert of the current series will be held Thursday, April 13.
