Always Working

Contrary to popular belief, the U.S. census bureau does not fold its tents and fade away between the big 10-year population and housing counts, according to director Theodore F. Olson of the bureau's permanent regional field office at Chicago. The Chicago region covers Illinois and Indiana.

Olson points out that nine major censuses will be conducted between now and the next decennial census in 1970. The first of these major censuses will be the 1962 census of governments which is conducted every five years. Then comes the five-year censuses of business, manufactures and mineral industries. These will be taken in 1964 and 1969, covering business operations in 1963 and 1968 respectively. The census of agriculture will be conducted in 1964 and 1969.

In addition to these major censuses, the bureau carries out a wide variety of current surveys on a monthly, quarterly and annual basis. Topics covered in the current surveys include employment and unemployment, population characteristics, health, housing, retail and wholesale trade, manufacturing, and related subjects. The purpose of the current surveys is to supplement and keep up to date the detailed information collected in the major censuses.

The current population survey, conducted 12 times a year, is probably the best known census bureau interim activity since it provides monthly information on employment and unemployment. Information obtained by interviews in 333 sample areas of the country is combined to furnish statistics for national estimates. Information on migration, income, school enrollment, and other pertinent subjects is collected from time to time in the current population survey in addition to the facts on employment and unemployment.

Approximately 35,000 households throughout the country are included each month in the current population survey. These households are selected at random under the census bureau's scientific sampling program to provide a representative cross-section of all classes of the population, and all types of areas of the country — large cities, small towns, rural areas, and so forth.

Little Chats on Public Notice

By James E. Pollard

When Is Delinquent

(No. 23 in a Series)

Quirks in the law often confuse the layman. There are even times when the bar and the bench are puzzled. And not infrequently both attorneys and the courts differ in their interpretations of the law. Technicalities may arise in the area of public notices, or legal advertising, but not often. One of these peculiar situations resulted when a professional man traded a building lot he owned on a piece of rental property. He had a clear title to the lot on which some assessments were due for street paving, sidewalks and similar improvements.

To make sure he was entirely in the clear, he wrote a check for the taxes then due as well as for the assessments to date. But he made the mistake of writing the check to the broker on his assurance that he would take care of the payment, instead of making it direct to the county treasurer.

To make a long story short, the broker unfortunately went into bankruptcy and the payee's money went "down the drain." After a while, in due course, his name was published in a local newspaper as a delinquent taxpayer although he was innocent. When some of his friends learned of it, they joshed him about it.

Still worse, after consulting several attorneys, he learned that because of the technicalities involved it would take an act of the legislature to clear his name. His friends believed his story, of course, but he suffered a lot of good natured kidding. Even this legal accident proved, again the power of the public notice.

$382.54 Given To Junior Red Cross

Young people from 25 elementary and high schools in Adams county contributed $382.54 to the Adams county junior Red Cross during December, junior Red Cross month. Mrs. Luther Brokaw, county junior Red Cross chairman, said today.

Each school will receive the Junior Red Cross News and Journal, which explains what junior clubs are doing all over the world, as well as in the United States. Included are many factual stories of interest to young people.

Approximately $150 of the amount will go to the national children's fund. This fund supplies food and medical care to needy children all over the world through Red Cross facilities.

At the present time, the young students of Mary's Catholic Civics club are filling gift boxes to be sent to needy children overseas through their Red Cross program.

Foltz Speaks In County Wednesday

A total of 72 reservations have been made for the dinner tonight at which Donald E. Foltz, director of the department of conservation for the state of Indiana, will speak at Bluffton. This is about twice the size of the usual Lions club meeting.

Foltz will tour the area Wednesday, and speak in Adams county Wednesday at 8 p.m. at the Adams Central gymnasium. Mayor Donald F. Gage, of Decatur, will preside at the meeting, which is expected to be heavily attended by local conservationists.

Program Plan
According to reports, Foltz will be allowed a half-hour to explain the conservation department's program. Questions will then be permitted, while a caucus is held to determine if counter-proposals are in order.

Comments on Indiana's new program by conservation department officials in other nearby states have been generally favorable to the recent switch from game farms to habitat programs.

Conservationists in this area have doubted the value of the change, and are expected to object to it again Wednesday night.

The following comments were published January 14 in Bayou Bill Seifert's column, "Lines and Shots," in the Indianapolis Star.

Minnesota
James W. Kimball, director of the Minnesota Division of Fish and Game wrote the following to Woodrow W. Fleming, director of the Indiana Division of Fish and Game:

"Please accept my congratulations on your desire to reduce wasteful spending on artificial propagation. By the time you get the job done you may be somewhat battered and bruised but, certainly, still more worthy of congratulations.

"Our money is much better spent on environmental controls. Game farms are valuable for introductory stocking but not for maintenance stocking."

Ohio Report
Hayden W. Olds, chief of the Ohio Division of Wildlife, writes: "Stocking of artificially reared pheasants on public hunting areas in Ohio is done primarily to attract 'excess' hunters from private lands onto the public areas. This is done in an effort to keep the possibilities of undesirable hunting pressure on private land to a minimum.

"Our stocking program on private lands is limited to coopeative rearing projects with the sportsmen's clubs. Day-old or six-week old pheasants are furnished to the clubs which then rear them to release age."

Missouri
Larry R. Gale, chief of the Missouri Fish and Game Division: "Our game bird propagation program is designed only for experimental purposes and we make no effort to provide hunting by annual releases of any kind of game.

"The trouble is, restocking does not work; habitat improvement does.

"During the past 20 years extensive experiments and studies in most of the quail-producing states have proved, again and again, that pen-reared quail do not survive in habitat where even wild birds cannot, do not increase populations in areas already carrying what they can support, and add so little in good ranges where birds are temporarily elbow capacity as to be prohibitively expensive. Moreover, recent information indicates the introduction of pen-reared quail, or even wild-trapped birds from other locations may, if they survive long enough to interbreed with native stock, cause the latter to deteriorate and itself become less able to survive.

The cost of releasing quail ahead of the gun is likewise prohibitive to the state and will not result in any significant state-wide gain in public hunting success."

Kentucky
Minor Clark, commissioner of the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources: "Kentucky is operating probably the largest quail farm in the country and at the same time is propagating several different species of exotic birds. With quail we hatch the eggs and distribute the day-old birds to local clubs for propagation and release in six to eight weeks.

"We know full well that our program offers little prospect for the improvement of fall quail hunting, but it is so popular in Kentucky that the sportsmen would not at this time let us cease propagating."

Arkansas
T. H. Holder, assistant director of the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission: "This department has felt all along that the artificial propagation of game birds is a complete waste of money except where an effort is being made to introduce new birds such as the Reeves pheasant or the Iranian-

cross pheasants.

Michigan
Gerald E. Eddy, director of the Michigan Department of Conservation: "Attempts to stock game birds for the gun have proved to be uneconomic and unnecessary on Michigan public lands. Once the pheasant became established, for example, we learned that further stocks, at the level feasible for a public agency, was without value.

"Our chief emphasis, in both fish and game management, is in the area of habitat improvement and population control."

Iowa
E. T. Rose, chief of the Iowa Division of Fish and Game: "Our stocking of both game birds and fish is based upon the philosophy that if the environment is adequate and brood stock is present that no further stocking will be done. Under no circumstances do we stock before the gun in any area in Iowa."

Wisconsin
G. E. Sprecher, assistant director of the Wisconsin Conservation Department: "... As far as game propagation is concerned, it is limited to pheasant propagation. We spend about $225,000 a year and produce day-old chicks for various conservation clubs and produce about 32,000 mature birds for stocking public hunting grounds in the fall."

Instructor Course Opens February 5

An instructor's course in first aid, will start Monday, February 5, at the Red Cross chapter house in Fort Wayne, and will be open to the 25 qualified holders of advanced first aid certificates in Adams county, it was announced today.

The course will be conducted for one week, Monday through Friday, and will run from 7-10 p.m. nightly during the period. Those applying must be at least 20 years of age.

This is an instructor's training course, for those who desire to teach Red Cross first aid courses, and no first aid above and beyond the advanced course is taught. The course simply teaches how to teach.

Anyone interested should register immediately at the local Red Cross office with Mrs. Wanda Oelberg, or in Fort Wayne by noon, Feb. 3, with the Red Cross safety services office, 406 W. Berry.

May Ask Change In State Law Of 1869

By HORTENSE MYERS

United Press International

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — The next legislature almost surely will be asked to amend an 1869 law specifying that the superintendent of the Indiana Girls School must be a woman.

Commissioner Arthur Campbell of the Indiana Board of Correction confirmed that discussion has been underway on the advisability of seeking a change so that the board could appoint either a man or a woman.

He said the current difficulty the board is having in getting a superintendent for the school, and the satisfactory work done by two men who have served as acting superintendents had prompted the discussion. He stressed that should such a bill be offered, it would be permissive, merely freeing the board to name a man if it could not find a qualified woman for the superintendency.

Mrs. E. E. Voyle, Indianapolis, a longtime member of the schools board, said she felt that Glenn E. Douthitt, who currently is acting superintendent, "is doing a very good job."

McCart Filled In
She said James McCart, former Indiana Boys School superintendent who also filled in as head of the girls institution a few months ago, also demonstrated that a man could do a good job as well as a woman.

Both men are state penal officials and were drafted for the girls school assignment pending appointment of a woman. Douthitt, who is acting superintendent now, regularly is head of the division of classification and treatment. McCart is a deputy commissioner.
