Air Corridor Conflict Top Berlin Danger

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst
At this time of year, when the fog comes rolling in from the North Sea, it seems that more often than not the air corridor linking Frankfurt and Berlin is covered with an impenetrable blanket.

As the air transport lifts from Frankfurt airport's wet, glistening runway, there will be no further sight of the ground until some 45 minutes later when suddenly the airplane's wingtips seem almost to brush Berlin apartment houses and moments later it pulls up under the passenger canopy at Tempelhof Airdrome.

Even with the fog, it is not a particularly hazardous flight so long as men and machines are allowed to function without interference.

Tempelhof is located in the American sector of West Berlin.

Also located there is the Allied air control center where, in shifts around the clock, the four powers inform each other of their air traffic on the three 20-mile corridors linking West Berlin with the outside world through Hamburg, Frankfurt and Hanover.

Their concern is air safety rather than control and generally the exchange of information is a silent one in notes passed back and forth.

The chief Russian is named A. P. Stromov.

In the last two weeks Stromov has been extraordinarily busy as the Russians sought to establish authority over the corridors, the one link not subject to Communist checkpoints.

This was done in a series of notices that in specified periods the Soviet air force would require exclusive use of the corridors for maneuvers.

The notices were summarily rejected, and President Kennedy's personal representative, Gen. Lucius Clay, made himself a conspicuous passenger in one of the air transports defying the Soviet ban.

Western protests warned that the Soviets were "running the gravest risk" and that the West would "take the necessary steps" to insure both the safety of its aircraft and its right to unrestricted use of the corridors.

Allied commanders are agreed that the greatest chance for armed conflict over Berlin lies in the corridors, whether it be by interference from Communist fighter planes or from Communist jamming of the radio beams which guide Allied craft through fog to their destination.

Own Homes Now Average $20,000

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Nearly one of every 10 owner-occupied homes in Indiana had a market value of $20,000 or more in the spring of 1960, a Commerce Department report showed today.

The department said a 1960 housing census showed the median value of such properties in Indiana was $10,200, with 1 per cent worth $35,000 or more, 3 per cent worth $25,000 to $34,900, 5 per cent worth $20,000 to $24,900, 5 per cent worth $17,500 to $19,900, 8 per cent worth $15,000 to $17,000, 12 per cent worth $12,500 to $14,900, 17 per cent worth $5,000 to $7,400, and 14 per cent worth less than $5,000.

The census tabulated 782,635 dwellings occupied by their owners, of which nearly 70,000 or 9 per cent, were worth $20,000 or more.

The report said the median value of one-housing unit, non-farm, owner-occupied properties in Lake County was $13,800, the highest of 10 counties on the Indiana list of counties having 15,000 or more of such dwellings.

Other counties were Allen $12,000, Marion $11,900, LaPorte $11,100, St. Joseph and Elkhart $10,000, Madison $9,900, Delaware $9,200, Vanderburgh $9,000 and Vigo $7,000.

The bulk of families living in rental property paid $50 to $99 rent per month. This rental range accounted for 62 per cent of the total. Eighteen per cent paid less than $50 and 12 per cent paid more than $99. The state median was $70.

For Indiana counties having 9,000 or more renter - occupied housing units, the median gross rents ranged from $56 in Vigo County to $78 in Marion County. Other medians were Lake $76, Allen and St. Joseph $74, Madison $67, Delaware $65, Vanderburgh $61.
