Liquid Coal

Another behind-the-scenes national fight is taking place this year, between the coal industry, and powerful forces trying to stop the utilization of pipelines to transport a new form of coal...liquid coal.

Most of us are aware that the coal mining areas of southern Indiana, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, etc., have been badly hurt by unemployment, as coal dropped in use from accounting for 75% of national energy to just 23%.

Now, a way has been found of grinding coal, and mixing it with water, so that it can be transported through pipelines from mines to places where it is used. It cuts the cost, and can even cut the cost of manufacturing electricity by use of coal.

A pipeline, however, can be constructed only if it can acquire the necessary rights of way, like a railroad, telegraph line, telephone line, etc. The legislature must grant the coal pipelines the right of eminent domain, or they cannot secure land for the lines.

Those who would seek to lose if such a pipeline was built, such as railroads, have been attempting to prevent passage of enabling legislation, which, however, has already passed in West Virginia and Ohio. President Kennedy has asked Congress to act on this important question. At present, there is a plan to construct a West Virginia-New York pipeline if the law is approved. Indiana ranks sixth in states east of the Mississippi in coal reserves, estimated at 34,997 million tons.

No Discipline Due To Soblen's Escape

By DONALD MAY
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The expulsion of convicted Soviet spy Dr. Robert Soblen from Israel demonstrated that it is not as easy to escape U.S. law authorities as it might appear.

Soblen had several things going for him that most would-be fugitives do not have.

First, he was not under surveillance when he fled last week following the Supreme Court's rejection of his last appeal from a life sentence.

The FBI and Justice Department were convinced he would not flee because he was 62 years old and suffering from leukemia. Then too, his family and others had posted his $100,000 bond in cash and securities.

The element of surprise was so much on Soblen's side that Justice Department and FBI spokesmen say no one will be disciplined because of his escape because no one was assigned to prevent it.

Second, Soblen was convicted of espionage which is considered a "political" offense.

Traditionally, extradition treaties cover only criminal offenses. Even if there had been a treaty with Israel, it would not have covered Soblen's case.

And extradition treaties cover only crimes which are illegal in both countries.

Knew Of Lack

Second, Soblen apparently knew in advance that Israel did not have an extradition treaty with the United States. This was a big advantage.

Almost every week, the State Department legal advisor's office gets a telephone call from a hopeful voice seeking information.

"I'm planning a short trip abroad," the caller says, "and I wonder if you could recommend a nearby country with a good climate that does not have an extradition treaty with the United States."

Some of the callers try to disguise themselves — as "school teacher," for example, inquiring for a list of countries without extradition treaties to give her civics class. Some are from lawyers in behalf of clients.

Others are completely candid — like one caller recently referred to the State Department through a congressman.

"Could you please hurry that information," the man said. "I think I may have to leave very soon."

No matter who the caller, the State Department never answers the question — not even for this reporter.

"The United States has extradition treaties with 65 to 70 countries," an official said. "That leaves some 30 where there is no treaty. But I'm afraid I can't tell you which is which."

Pitfalls Still Exist
But there are many pitfalls for even a fugitive with some advance legal knowledge.

A number of nations have laws permitting authorities to return a fugitive even if there is no treaty covering the situation.

Israel relied on another expedient in Soblen's case.

It merely charged that the convicted spy entered the country with an illegal passport and bundled him on a plane. Because of this, chief U.S. Marshal James McShane technically did not have Soblen in custody during flight.

The fugitive was not handcuffed, therefore, and managed to stab himself, thereby forcing his confinement in a London hospital.

A large percentage of the cases are much simpler than Soblen's, however, merely because the fugitive does not know which countries are "safe."

The information is a matter of public record, however. It is contained in a standard legal volume found in almost every lawyer's office, any good public library and in many prison libraries.

"But you'd be surprised," the State Department man said, "How many people, including lawyers, don't know where to look. Also, finding it and looking up all the cross references may take time which may even be a critical delay."

Reporter Finds Volume
This reporter located the volume with little difficulty and found that most of the no-extradition countries are small, hot and underdeveloped.

Brazil is the only one in the Western Hemisphere. Sweden is the only one in Western Europe.

The rest are mainly new African states, a large part of the Arab Middle East, an occasional tension spot such as Laos, plus the Soviet Union, East Germany and Red China.

The United States has extradition treaties with Communist Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Rumania. But they seldom have been honored.

Brazil long has been a favorite haven for Americans in difficulty with the law.

It recently has become the home of fugitive financier, Edward Gilbert, indicted last month on charges involving nearly $2 million in funds used in a complex stock buying effort. Texas promoter Ben Jack Gage, indicted on bribery and embezzlement charges, and others from the financial world also have sought refuge in Brazil.

A U.S. extradition treaty with Brazil lapsed in 1912 during a revision of local Brazilian laws. Apparently through lethargy, sporadic negotiations failed to produce a new one.

New Treaty Signed
Finally, in January, 1961, a new treaty with Brazil was negotiated and signed. It has been ratified by the U.S. Senate but not yet by Brazil.

When it takes effect, the fate of Rio de Janeiro's fugitive colony probably will be up to the courts. U.S. officials plan to argue that it applies retroactively. But defense lawyers will no doubt contest this.

Because the Brazilian constitution forbids the death penalty, the United States agreed that returned fugitives will not face capital punishment.

The United States negotiated an extradition treaty with Sweden last October and it is due to go to the U.S. Senate soon for ratification. A treaty also has been tentatively drafted with Israel. But it still is in the process of having the English and Hebrew texts coordinated.

Modern Etiquette

Q. I'm a salesman and often receive invitations to the weddings of customers' daughters. Am I supposed to send wedding gifts in these cases?

A. Although customary, it is not obligatory. It's really up to you, how friendly you are with the customer involved, and whether possibly it would be "good business" to counter with a gift of some kind.

Q. If a birthday party is being held in a nightclub, is it proper to bring gifts to be opened there, or is this reserved for home parties?

A. Since gifts are usually brought to birthday parties, I don't see that the setting of the party makes any difference.

Q. I should like to insure my engagement ring. (Am I supposed to pay for this, or should my fiancé pay the premium?)

A. The ring's safekeeping is entirely dependent upon you. After you're married, of course, your husband assumes this expense.

Hoosier Is Named President Of NEA

DENVER, Colo. (UPI)—Robert H. Wyatt, 59, who began his teaching career at the age of 16, will take office next year as president of the powerful National Education Associates NEA.

Wyatt, executive secretary of the Indiana State Teachers Association ISTA since 1938, was named president-elect of the NEA at Friday's session of the annual convention here.

He automatically will become president at the 1963 convention in Detroit. He will succeed Mrs. Hazel Blanchard, Fresno, Calif., who was installed Friday night as president.

A native of Noble County, Ind., Wyatt determined to become a teacher when he was a 10-year-old seventh grader. Six years later, he was teaching in a rural school near Fort Wayne at a salary of $800 a year.

He completed his education through extension and correspondence courses and summer classes and by the time he was 21 he held a bachelor's degree and a master's degree from Indiana University.

He then began teaching in the Fort Wayne school system and joined the local chapter of the Classroom Teachers Association of 27, he became president of the CTA and the ISTA. At the age of 27, he was elected state president four years later.

In 1938, Wyatt was picked as executive secretary of the ISTA, succeeding C. O. Williams who had died a few months earlier. Williams had been the group's first executive secretary.

Kennedy Clan Back At Hyannis Port

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (UPI)—President Kennedy and most of the Kennedy clan were back together in their summer surroundings on Cape Cod today for a weekend of leisure.

Weather permitting, the President hoped to go cruising aboard the family's 52-foot yacht, Marlin. Kennedy's 92-foot presidential vessel, the Honey Fitz, has not yet arrived here for the summer weekends.

The Chief Executive was greeted by sunshine, a light breeze, and about 500 people when he arrived with Mrs. Kennedy and their two children at Otis Air Force Base, Mass., at 6:01 p.m. Friday.

Two turbo-jet military helicopters flew the first family 18 miles or so to Squaw Island in Hyannis Port, where they are staying at the home of family friend Morton Downey, an Irish tenor turned soft drink executive.

This was the first big assembling of the close-knit Kennedy family here this year. On hand for the weekend were brother Robert, the U.S. attorney general, and Teddy, a candidate for the Democratic senatorial nomination in Massachusetts.

Adams Central Vo-Ag Rated First Class

Martin Watson, vo-ag instructor at Adams Central, was recently notified that the department of vocational agriculture has been classified as "first class" for the 1961-62 fiscal year.

Only 55 schools merited this classification for their vocational agriculture program. The plan of reimbursement which includes the classification of departments is helpful in upgrading the vocational agriculture program, H. B. Taylor, state supervisor, wrote.

"An effort should be made to schedule the period for on-farm instruction and preparation the last period of the school day," is a recommendation which was made for the continued improvement of the agriculture department at Adams Central.
