Rail Dispute Board Named By Kennedy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy has blocked a threatened nationwide railroad strike for at least 60 days by appointing a three-man emergency board to investigate the dispute over work rules.

The President named the special fact-finding board Wednesday night in the final step available under the National Railway Labor Act to prevent a walkout. The action automatically bars a strike for 60 days.

Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, special counsel to Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Truman, was named chairman of the board which will meet in Washington a week from today to begin discussions.

The two other members of the panel are veteran labor mediators. They are Prof. Nathan Feinsinger of the University of Wisconsin Law School and Dr. Clark Kerr, president of the University of California.

The controversy over what the railroads call "featherbedding" reached the showdown stage when the Supreme Court ruled that the companies were free to abolish thousands of jobs which had been protected by long-standing union rules.

Kennedy's appointment of the fact-finding board was precipitated by the railroads' announcement that they planned to put the work rule changes into effect Monday. Five operating unions had threatened to go on strike to prevent the carriers from making the changes. The National Mediation Board immediately notified the President that a transportation emergency existed and recommended creation of the board.

The board has 30 days to study the problem and another 30 days to write a report. Its recommendations will not be binding on either party.

Sentenced To Jail For Drunk Driving

Mary Castle, 48, of Decatur, was fined $150 and costs and sentenced to three days in jail at Van Wert, O., on a charge of driving while under the influence of intoxicants. The court also suspended her Ohio driving privilege until she complies with the financial responsibility law.

Spending Spree By Boys Ends Abruptly

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Not many 12-year-old boys know the wondrous feeling of sudden and boundless wealth. But then not many 12-year-old boys find $2,000 wrapped in a diaper in their basement.

The bonanza lasted exactly five days and came to an end when the big spender was betrayed by a woman — his 15-year-old sister. Police said the story began last Thursday, when the boy's grandmother came to visit the family.

The grandmother was worried about her money, and her son-in-law, the 12-year-old's father, wrapped it in a diaper and tucked it away on a rafter in the basement.

Enter the boy and a 15-year-old friend, playing in the basement. "Look what I found," cries one, and away they go.

First they took $80 and high-tailed it to playland-at-the-beach for a day of trying out all the rides and filling up on popcorn.

Then they tapped the mine again and took a bunch of cronies for another spree at playland. Then some new clothes, and some gifts to the boys — $90 to one, $67 to another, $40 to a third.

Then came black Monday, and the boy's sister found out. She found her brother and another boy sitting in a car, apparently divvying up $1080. They offered her $100 for her silence, but she could not be bought. She told her father and down came the curtain.

"It was quite a spree while it lasted," said officer Roger Hanes. "They were give-away artists."

The boy was held at Youth Guidance Center, along with five of his friends who admitted accepting money. Police said $1,400 of the money was recovered, but as for the other $600—well, it was fun.

The grandmother, more worried than ever, is cooped up at the family home — on Thrift Street.
