Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. Does the father of a widow or divorcee, who is marrying for the second time, give her away?

A. Yes; her father gives her away precisely as he did at the first wedding. And her family assumes the expenses of the wedding, unless she prefers to meet them herself.

Q. When a hostess passes cigarettes after a meal, isn't it permissible for a guest to refuse them and smoke his own if he prefers to do so?

A. No; he should accept the cigarette offered by his hostess.

CLERICUS SAYS

CLERICUS SAYS: Man's appearance on the earth was due to the creative energy and mind of God and thus is the result of God's plan for His universe. The Bible seeks to answer man's basic questions in terms of God Himself and does not pretend to explain man's appearance on earth as science does. The creation reveals God at work. Man is uniquely related to God since He is created in God's image, he stands as the crown of creation, yet is subject to God. Many of man's passions and desires seem to link him with the world, yet there are within him ideals and aspirations which point toward God. Man's life reaches its highest fulfillment only when lived in the recognition of the sovereignty of God.

Lesson Prayer

LESSON PRAYER: Dear Father, we thank Thee that just as all men are Thy children, so all men are brothers and that as Christians, we must acknowledge our brotherhood with our fellowmen. May we be ever mindful that Thou art more interested in our attitudes than in our achievements and that if we truly desire to do right and have the right spirit, Thou art with us. May we be on guard against evil and be strong enough and courageous enough to help others battle their temptations.

You, Your Child And The School

By DAVID NYDICK

UPI Education Specialist

The pre-teen years often are considered quite difficult. This probably is more true for parents than for the youngsters.

Some typical reactions of pre-teen children:

—The mother of John, 11, suggested that they go to the movies together on Saturday. She was upset when he said he planned to go swimming with friends.

—Fred, 12, told his father he wanted to go hiking with his Boy Scout troop instead of on a fishing trip with the family. His father was surprised since they always had so much fun on these trips.

—Ten-year-old Ann's room was messy and she didn't seem to care about her looks. She preferred wearing dungarees to dresses. Her parents were distressed that she was becoming a tomboy.

Difficult To Accept

These actions and attitudes are difficult for parents to accept. But the children want to be with their peers. They seem to rebel against the family. They appear to intentionally reject authority just to prove it can be done.

Up to this point the child almost completely has been dependent. He has enjoyed spending time with his parents. He has shown only minor signs of independence. Now the change seems to be quite dramatic.

The natural reaction of many parents is to block this development. They will either exert more authority or perhaps extend themselves to show their love and affection. The child reacts by becoming more intent on proving his independence. He becomes stubborn.

Parents should realize that this is part of growing up. They too went through this stage of development, and should accept the child for what he is. This doesn't mean to drop all standards. It does mean to administer authority with understanding.

Allow Experiments

Allow the child to experiment. He can learn a great deal by trial and error. His curiosity, restlessness, loud behavior, and daring should be guided into safe and satisfying activities. He wants to join clubs and organizations. He may even organize a two-man club. He is seeking status and recognition.

The pre-teen years surely are trying times for parents. The best approach is to recognize that most of this behavior is normal. Although the child seems to resent love and attention, he needs them as much as ever. There is no need to permit him to become disrespectful or extremely demanding. He should have the time and opportunity to pursue his private activities. If this is arranged, he is more likely to show cooperation with the family.

Proper guidance at this time can avoid serious trouble in the future.

A HAPPY HOME

Parents should realize the importance of three attributes of youth important to their development, namely, their faith, their activity, their ability to dream. An epitome of the spirit of youth is expressed by William Carey when he said: "Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God." Youth is activity. The hands of youth are in ceaseless motion; the feet of youth seek restlessly for errands upon which to run. To youth, passivity is an intolerable burden. Quietness is oppression. To be going, to be moving, to be doing, is youth's ceaseless impulse. All youth's qualities are shot through with hope and high aspiration. Youth is forever dreaming dreams and seeing visions. It knows nothing of hard facts, takes account of no opposition, recognizes no impossibilities. What ought to be can be to youth, and what can be must be. Youth should be blessed for having these qualities which often dim as people grow older.

Several years ago leading educators formulated the most important principles involved in the educational processes. Since parents have much to do with the physical, mental and spiritual aspects of their children's growth, these principles should be of interest. They are: 1. Mastery of the fundamentals — reading, writing and arithmetic — they open the windows of mental perception.

2. The bread and butter aim. Every one should master a
