Fair And Warmer To Continue In State

By United Press International

Fair and warmer and no rain in sight, except for a chance of isolated showers somewhere.

That was the latest forecast for Indiana from the Weather Bureau today, a prediction which under normal circumstances would be cheerfully received by most Hoosiers.

But it brought mostly gloom this time because a drought now in its ninth week has made a dusty, parched shambles of grasslands, brushlands and woodlands while falling leaves turn crisp and crackle underfoot.

The isolated showers forecast wasn't very hopeful. It showed up in the forecast for the northern third of the state and neither the central nor south, except that the general morning forecast for southern and central areas said there was "just a chance of isolated showers west," if you can figure that out.

Temperatures ranged Monday from 77 at Fort Wayne to 85 at Evansville at their high points, then dropped sharply to lows ranging from 37 at Fort Wayne to 59 at Evansville early this morning.

Highs today were expected to be from near 80 to the low 80s all around the state. Tonight will be a little warmer with lows from near 50 to the upper 50s. Highs Wednesday will range from the mid 70s to the low 80s, and the outlook for Thursday was for little change in temperature.

It will be fair today, partly cloudy to fair tonight, partly cloudy Wednesday and fair to partly cloudy Thursday.

Need Certificate To Collect Sales Tax

Revenue commissioner James C. Courtney announced today that there are still many persons selling at retail who have not filed an application for a registered retail merchant certificate. The sales tax will become effective October 23 at 12:01 a. m. Persons selling at retail must have a registered retail merchant certificate as their authority to collect the tax from the purchaser. Otherwise such seller may be liable for the tax.

Most businesses and professional people, dealing in tangible personal property, will be required to register and receive a registered retail merchant certificate which will allow them to make purchases for resale.

For the purpose of collecting the sales tax in transactions constituting selling at retail and for the issuance of exemption certificates in purchase exempt from the tax, the following are required to obtain a registered retail merchant certificate:

1. All individuals, firms, partnerships, corporations and associations selling at retail in Indiana as retail merchants. Generally defined, selling at retail as retail means persons who in the ordinary course of a regularly conducted business sell any tangible personal property for use or consumption by the purchaser.

2. Wholesalers.
3. Manufacturers.
4. Public utilities.
5. Hotels, motels and other persons regularly renting for periods of less than thirty (30) days.

6. Governmental, charitable or educational organizations which perform private or proprietary selling activities.

Application forms for registered retail merchant certificates are available at most banks in the state and all department of revenue offices.

The revenue department will furnish the registered retail merchant certificate without charge to all governmental agencies, however, such agencies must make application in the usual manner.

Farmers not selling at retail will be required to sign exemption certificate for qualified purchases without obtaining a registered retail merchant certificate.

Farmers not selling at retail will not be required to apply for a registered retail merchant certificate. They will be requested to sign an agriculture exemption certificate when making purchases of seed, feed, fertilizer, machinery and other similar items which are used in the production of food and commodities for resale.

Dirksen Says Aid Plan Is In Deep Water

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen said today that President Kennedy's foreign aid program was in "deep, deep trouble" because of a "harder appraisal" by Congress and the country.

The Illinois Republican would not speculate on how much of Kennedy's original $4.5 billion authorization request might ultimately be approved by Congress.

But his statement, made in an interview, supported speculation that the administration may finally get little more than the $3.5 billion voted by the House.

Chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which went back to work on the bill at a closed session today, agreed that the program faced difficulty. But "it's always in trouble," he told reporters.

Fulbright said he would hold sessions every day this week if possible in hopes of finishing committee action and sending the long-delayed measure to the floor. But he would make no predictions as to how soon or how much the committee would finally vote.

"We will just plow our corn as we go along," he said.

The foreign relations group sidetracked the authorization measure more than two months ago to work on the limited test ban treaty. In the meantime, opposition — at least to some parts of it — appears to have increased rather than calmed down.

Dirksen said "the number of recipient countries is going down" and there are other areas in which many senators feel the aid program "isn't doing anything worthwhile."

Compared with past years, he said, "the program is in infinitely more trouble — deep, deep trouble."

The GOP leader said the situation was due to "the new attitude up here in Congress and to a new and harder attitude in the country."
