THOUSANDS

volunteer rescue workers throughout Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky and southern Indiana struggled feverishly to set up emergency shelter for the homeless.

The Red Cross said up to 15,000 persons may be forced from their homes at Louisville alone by the time the Ohio hits its peak. Water rationing was in effect at Wooster, Ohio, and the Coney Island amusement park at Cincinnati was under water.

River veterans said the flooding was the worst since World War II.

Scores of roads were blocked by high water from Illinois eastward into Pennsylvania. Ohio alone reported at least 75 state highways cut off by raging water and nine federal roads impassable.

The heavy snowstorm that swept through a wide area from the Ozarks to northern New England Tuesday brought down power lines, clogged more roads and added to the misery of the violent late - winter weather.

Hardest hit by the new snowfall was New England. Newport, Vt., was slugged with 11 inches of fresh snow in six hours during the night, making nearly a foot and a half on the ground. Sixteen inches fell at Canada Lake and Boonville, N.Y.

The Red Cross said 23 counties in Kentucky, 16 in Ohio, 15 in Pennsylvania and six in Indiana. Additional workers, including nurses, were being sent into the flood area.
