No Place to Go?

Last week we had another request from a junior high girl concerning use of the community building and the schools. It seems that the sixth, seventh and eighth grade girls feel that they are "left out" because they are not allowed to attend the high school post-game dances, nor be in the youth center after 8 p.m. on weekends, when there are dances.

The young lady wanted a place to hold dances for junior high students. Now, we do not categorically oppose to dancing. But we do feel that any junior high school pupil should be under the direct supervision of her parents, not only while dancing but at all times.

Young people below high school age and grade are much better off if they have their entertainment at different homes, sponsored by the parents of the children. The idea of a junior high girl holding a dance, without proper supervision, is a little disconcerting.

There is plenty of time in life for dancing and dating after you get in high school, and even later. Rushing it only cheapens the relationship between boys and girls. You can bet that when a high school boy "dates" a junior high girl that it is frequently less than flattering to the girl — he merely wants to take advantage of her lesser experience.

Parents should realize that children are a responsibility — their responsibility. They cannot be pushed off onto society while they are still young. The tendency of the present generation of parents to just shove off their children so that they, the parents can go out and have a good time is immoral and disgusting.

Recently we attended a late-evening movie. Grade-school children were left in that movie completely unattended, except by the oldest child! The mothers could be seen, well-dressed and apparently having had a good time, arriving to look for their "kids" at all hours — midnight, 1 a.m., etc.

Junior high young people, and those younger do have a place to go — and it's HOME. After 8 p.m., if they are not with their parents or other close relative, they should be at home. If they have their studies satisfactorily, there is certainly nothing wrong with their having a good time — under the proper supervision of their parents.

Even after school, it is very bad practice to allow the younger children to roam around downtown at will. The undoubtedly have studies. If no one is at home, they should understand that they are to return home anyway, and study, and should be occasionally checked on. If the children are old enough and responsible enough, they can always study at the local public library, which is open in the afternoon for serious scholars and pupils.

Patients' Articles
Are Displayed Here

A number of articles made by patients of the Marion V. A. hospital are currently on display in the window of the Chamber of Commerce.

The items were loaned to the local military Order of Cooties and the Cootie auxiliary for display and are to be returned to the hospital next week. The year is nearly ended for the Cooties and the Cootie auxiliary, and both are working hard at hospital work in hopes of receiving the state trophy.

The Cooties received both the trophy for the highest honors in the state and the traveling trophy last year.

Those donating items during the year for Cootie work were Dunbar Mfg., Swiss City Furniture, Smith Bros. Furniture, Wayne Novelty, Decatur Industries, Standard Lumber Co., Duo-Marine, Albion Mfg., Hussman Decorating House, Kelly's Dry Cleaning, Bag Service Inc., Art Hurst, and others.
