

Students' Night At Presbyterian Church

Sunday night, beginning at 5:30 with a basket supper, the First Presbyterian church is centering the attention of its evening program on its high school students. Special guests for the evening will include the Rev. George Barker, Westminster foundation pastor to students on the Ball State campus, and three students who will present some interesting insights into different phases of college life.

First Presbyterian, like so many other churches across the nation, is presenting personal copies of the new "Going-To-College Handbook" to all its high school students as an expression of the church's interest in their college and future careers. E. E. Rydell, chairman of the committee on Christian education, will make the presentation of this 18th issue.

Dr. W. W. Cravens will serve as master of ceremonies for the evening. Following the evening meal, the children of sixth grade and under will go to the annex, where there will be a special program of films of an instructive and entertaining nature. The rest of the family night group will be led in singing by the U.P.Y. fellowship, who also has charge of the table arrangements.

In the feature article of the "Going-To-College Handbook," Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg challenges students to consider careers in science where, he predicts, "the earth's mantle will be penetrated and the floors of the ocean mined for minerals and farmed for food; space travel will become commonplace and planets and the moon will be explored by man; the genetic code will be mastered and great strides toward personal control by psychochemicals will be achieved."

Dr. Nathalie G. Renner of Alfred University, New York, challenges students, "When you go to College, Get an Education!" She cautions, "The accumulation of knowledge alone is not education but instruction, and an 'instructed' person is not an educated person."

NCOP—national campus opinion poll—gives reactions of hundreds of students from many campuses on the status of student government, personal acquaintance with college professors outside the classroom, conflicts between social studies textbooks and religious teachings, etc.

Of special interest in the handbook is a college board of young people from 30 colleges and universities who offer their judgment on six inquiries: "What can be done about student apathy?" "Of what significance is knowledge if you don't use it?" "The failure in race relations?" "Does a moral decline come in college?" "The issue of counter-coming out from behind the masks in personal relationships."

All families of the congregation are urged to take part in this occasion since it is the opening of family week. Bring table service and basket supper. Invite friends to come along. The program will begin promptly and close at 7:30.

Wabash Valley Group Seeking Flood Control

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Officials of the Wabash Valley Association appeared before a Senate appropriations subcommittee today to complete their bid for $25.6 million in flood control and water resource work in the two-state area during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The group, representing interests in Indiana and Illinois, made a similar plea to a House subcommittee Thursday.

The President's budget recommended $19.9 million for public works in the valley and the House committee has a reputation of reluctance to increase such budget requests.

However, George W. Gettenger, Mount Carmel, Ill., executive vice president of the association, said he was optimistic about the request.

"The committee members showed a sympathetic attitude," he said. "We were very favorably received."

Dick Bonebrake, Warren, Ind., thought the size of the 300-member delegation—about twice the number who usually make the trip—"will do some good."

Gettenger told the committee the association does not want "an ordinary program in our valley. We want a total program for all our people so that in the year 2050 we will have all the water we need."

Representatives of groups in other Indiana river basins also appeared before the House subcommittee Thursday to request funds for their areas.

A group representing Indiana and Michigan interests asked for $100,000 to "permit uninterrupted and rapid completion of the St. Joseph River Basin comprehensive study."

Rep. John Brademas, D-Ind., and Mrs. Chauncey Brockway Baldwin, Elkhart, Ind., acted as spokesmen for the group which also was to appear before the Senate subcommittee today.

"Economic forecasters predict the St. Joseph Valley will one day be part of a great metropolitan area extending from Cleveland to Chicago and Milwaukee," Brademas said. "If our area is to have a growing, progressive economy, if we are to be a strong link in the economic chain joining these cities, we must plan now for the future."

The Whitewater Valley Flood Control Association, Inc., made up of Indiana and Ohio residents, asked the committee for funds to begin work on the proposed reservoir at Brookville, Ind.

The President's budget recommended $165,000 to complete designs and planning of the multi-purpose reservoir but the association asked that the appropriation be increased to provide construction money.

New Radio Station Receives Equipment

Decatur's new radio station, WADM, has received all of its equipment, and the men are working 20 hours a day to put the station on the air as soon as possible, manager Joseph Klarke said this noon.

Originally the station had hoped to be on the air today, but equipment did not arrive in time. Klarke said he still doesn't know just when they will be able to get on the air, but it may be by May 5.
