A Little Comparison

Suppose you were a member of a local "XXXX" golf course. It's a good, average course, but like every enterprise, it could probably be improved. So you decide to try to do something about it.

You put a license plate on your car saying "XXXX Golf Course — Louziest Around." And you drive all over the country with this on your car.

What would be the effect? First, you would make everyone at the XXXX Golf Course mad at you. They would purposely do less for you. Second, you would keep new members away, and income would dwindle. Your membership would cost more, and finally you would discourage other members from belonging. The course would finally go broke, although you were probably well-intentioned in trying to get certain improvements.

Sound a little silly? Yes, it does. And yet certain Indiana citizens are doing that very thing — driving around with license plates reading "Indiana — Land of Taxes." This hurts the economy of our state. Worse, it isn't true. And what is particularly bad is that it will just eventually raise taxes by keeping out tax-paying businesses. And it certainly won't lead to a reduction in taxes.

Neither political party approves of the sign for these reasons. Both governor candidates promise economy — and more help for mental patients, new facilities for the girls school, better highways, etc.

In fact, the people of Indiana are demanding better roads, better service, of every kind.

The licenses mentioned are not only hurting the people and taxpayers of the state, but they are building up a reservoir of ill will. For example, a lady gave us a clipping from the Houston, Texas, Chronicle, about Indiana, headed "Welcome to Land-of-Taxes!" Another from Maine told of seeing a license on a back road there, and for Maine taxpayers to take heart, there were worse places!

It wouldn't surprise us a bit if an enterprising legislator would introduce a law to tax any vehicle an extra $1,000 for carrying such a license — poetic justice for those who defame the state.

If these people really wanted to help keep taxes down, they would be volunteering for the many non-paying jobs in community work. But they are not that kind of person — you don't see responsible people driving around with such licenses — only the unknowing.

Bluffton Fair Cuts Down On Exhibits

Lack of entrants and a desire to reduce expenditures have led to the elimination of three livestock exhibits which were once a feature attraction at the Bluffton street fair.

The fair association announced Monday that this year's street fair, scheduled to open Tuesday, Sept. 22, will not include the traditional cattle, swine and sheep exhibits which have been a hallmark of the fair during its 53 years of operation.

The controversial ruling gives further prominence to the part played in the fair by what the Bluffton News-Banner has termed "hanky-panky attractions."

The increasing carnival status of the fair came under fire three years ago when 93 businessmen, doctors and ministers presented a petition claiming that the "Bluffton street fair has outlived its usefulness and no longer serves the community constructively, and — a carnival has no place on the streets and highways of a modern community."

The School Reporter

DECATUR CATHOLIC HIGH

Patty Schurmer

Hi. It's that month again when leaves start falling and students start out with the books. With the first few days of school the summer seems to fade away out leaving only a few traces. The days of registrations, Tues- and Wednesday, saw carefree students filling through the halls. By Friday, however, the school feeling began working its way well into them. For the bewildered freshmen the feeling presented itself in a sensation of being lost. With the homework and studies, though, everyone will soon be back in swing.

"The Tattler," the yearbook our school had around 10 years ago, is going to be with us again this year. Already the staff, with Mike Reynolds and Susie Brite as co-editors, have been selling advertising for the book. Ed Heimann, the group's advisor, will help them keep the ball rolling. Since this is a new undertaking this year, the staff will appreciate the support of every student. There will be many opportunities for original work.

The National Honor Society is going to be more active than ever this year. The officers, Tom Foss, Elizabeth Rumschlag, Patty McBride and Judy Kohne, previewed the activities for this year at a recent meeting. The main item discussed was the Madonna honor club, which the NHS is going to sponsor. All students who are high in leadership, character and service but cannot quite make the scholarship requirements, will be eligible for membership. Choirs for singing are also going to be organized immediately. NHS is really moving this year.

The students who went to the summer school of Catholic Action in Chicago, Barb Braun, Tegesa Heimann, Patti Parrish, Tom Foss, Mike Reynolds, Alan Convent, discussed the sodality's activities for the coming year. At the S. S. C. A., Mike participated in a group meeting which discussed the sodality's theme for this year. Mike is the sodality's president.

The juniors' class rings have already arrived. Some of the new possessors are proudly flashing these rings about to the other classmates, hinting that theirs are unique. These rings seem to generate a feeling of belonging to DCHS.

HOAGLAND HIGH

By Marcia Geyers

Now another school year has begun. Most freshmen have been waiting anxiously for its beginning. Their class, the second largest in the history of Hoagland high school, finds it an exciting new challenge, much different from their grade school days. For sophomores, who have a year of experience behind them, school is becoming more routine. They know that loads of homework lie before them. Juniors realize the year will be a busy one for them. Magazine, and candy sales, planning the prom, and ushering at graduation are a few of the things they can't wait to tackle. Seniors, proud that their class is larger than the freshman's and therefore still the largest in Hoagland's history, recognize this 1964-1965 school term as their last year of high school. With some anxiety they look forward to graduation and the future, but with an even greater degree of sadness they realize this will be the end of many school friendships and many happy days at Hoagland.

— H. H. S. —

We are happy to welcome the new students who have joined our classes and the new teachers on the faculty. The student body is wishing all the new students luck in getting along with the teachers, and luck for new teachers in handling the classes!

— H. H. S. —

There is much work to be done in the weeks ahead — class officers to be elected, club and organization meetings to be scheduled, student librarians to be trained, and of course, much homework to do. With all this yet to be done, the students and the faculty join Mr. Mulligan, our principal, in wishing, "Only thirty-five more weeks to go!"
