

The Russians have reoccupied the position held by them previous to the Pleven disaster. They are receiving heavy reinforcements, and preparing to administer a crushing blow to the Turks.

From Galatz, a German reporter reports that the whole country about Edirne-Sighn is being devastated, and the villages and country roads are buried by flying bands of Bulgarian and Circassians.

An official dispatch published in St. Petersburg admits the loss of upwards of 5,000 men at Pleven, including one Colonel killed and a Major General and two Colonels wounded. The dispatch also admits that Gen. Gourkis has been obliged to retreat.

A cable dispatch says Gen. Gourkis has destroyed the railway between Jambol and Philippopolis. The whole country between Kazanlak and Adrianople will soon be destroyed, owing to the strife between the Turks and Bulgarians, unless the Russians press rapidly forward.

An Adrianople dispatch says: "There is a panic among the Bulgarians and Turkish fugitives from Edirne-Sighn and neighborhood. There are from 10,000 to 15,000, of whom 500 are wounded. Many are dying on the road from exhaustion and starvation. All are destined of every necessary of life."

In the naval engagement in Sulina river the Turkish ironclads attacked seven Russian gun-boats and destroyed two of them.

There is much sickness in the Russian army in the Dobruja.

The Russian Gen. Gourkis has retreated from his position in the Shkoda pass, and there are now no Russians south of the Balkans. This movement, it is said, was rendered necessary by the concentration which the Grand Duke Nicholas is carrying out in the valley of the Japet:

A cable dispatch announces that Achmet Pasha, who surrendered the fortress of Nikopolis to the Russians, has ended his life by suicide.

The Russian army in Bulgaria is beginning to suffer in health. In the Dobruja, where steaming swamps poison the air, and water, malarial fever and dysentery are playing havoc with Gen. Zimmern's army.

The cable reports a panic throughout Russia. Additional troops are being hurried hell-melt to the Danube. The religious communities are hastily packing and sending their valuables to Austria, fearing that they will be confiscated in the general war-levy for money, and there is an increasing feeling of uneasiness in Russian Poland. Nevertheless, there is much enthusiasm at Moscow and at St. Petersburg for war. The suburbs of the Russian capital are studded with tents and the city itself is full of martial sounds incident to the warlike preparations. A force of 185,000 landwards are nearly ready to start for the front, and there is every indication that Russia is determined to justify the general belief in her ultimate success.

The chief of Gen. Krudener's staff has been cited before a council of war to explain the failure at Pleven.

Character and courage charge of atrocities continue to be made by Russians and Turks, and both seem to contain the elements at least of truth. There is no doubt that this is the most cruel war in the history of the world. Repairs are made ruthlessly by both belligerents.
