

Democratic Sentinel.

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 22, 1878.

The earnings of the narrow gauge last month was $1,400 - expenses $700.

At the hands of Eliza Phillips, Esq., we have received invitation and ticket to the Thanksgiving Ball. Thanks.

A defeated candidate on being asked how he felt responded bitterly, "Like Lazarus - licked by the dogs."

Thanksgiving services at the M. E. Church, next Thursday, at 10 A. M. Rev. W. G. Vessels will deliver an address on "Our Country."

Uncle George Kessler will please accept our thanks for a number of fine pumpkins. Now who will furnish the Thanksgiving turkey?

Tickets for the Knights of Pythias ball on Thanksgiving evening can be procured at Innes' Drug Store, the Narrow Gauge Clothing Store, and at Charley Starr's.

On yesterday a dog stepped in among the handsome and costly china and glassware, in Charley Starr's show window, and for awhile pranced about with damaging effect.

Rev. Gilbert Small is expected to preach in the Presbyterian Church, at this place, 1st Sunday of December. A cordial invitation is extended the public to attend.

"They Are Coming!" will give several entertainments in this place during the holidays. They are now selecting plays.

The Lafayette Journal says "The Delphi Railroad war case has got into the United States Court, and is set down for a hearing before Judge Gresham on the 3d of December."

Messrs. Miller & Douthett have associated in the practice of the law, office up stairs in Starr's block, and are prepared to transact all business entrusted to them.

Quarterly Conference of the Church of God will be held in Rensselaer, Ind., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 29th, and continue over Sunday, Dec. 1st. H. V. Reed and other prominent speakers will be present. Public cordially invited to attend.

The partnership heretofore existing between Messrs. Yeoman & Douthett in the law practice has been dissolved. Mr. Douthett withdrawing. Mr. Yeoman remains in the room over the Narrow Gauge Store, where he will be pleased to meet all desiring his services.

Persons desiring Ink or Water Color Paintings, intended for Holiday Presents, will please leave their orders as soon as convenient, as this class of work takes time. So send in orders early, and we will guarantee perfect satisfaction.

J. A. SHARP.

MARRIED.—On Sunday evening, November 17th, at the residence of Mr. George Dougherty, three miles southeast of Rensselaer, by Rev. W. G. Vessels, Mr. Paris Dougherty and Miss Lucy Dougherty.

Extensive preparations for the occasion had been made by the parents; and a large number of invited guests were present and enjoyed the festivities of the evening. The young and happy couple left on Monday for Stockwell, Indiana, the home of Mr. Dougherty.

The result of the election in Michigan, where the republicans claim an overwhelming triumph, is reported as follows:

For governor, democrat, 78,000
For governor, republican, 72,057

Total, 150,057

For governor, republican, 122,165

Republican minority, 28,492

Here, again, in Michigan, as well as Pennsylvania, we have the figures showing the republican party to be largely in the minority, and the fact is made plain that, should the opponents of radicalism combine, there would be scarcely a state in the Union that would remain under radical rule.

Some months ago Carey Miller, teller of the First National Bank, Indianapolis, was arrested for embezzlement, and admitted to bail in the sum of $5,000. Since then Hayes instructed the District Attorney not to prosecute Miller. The Grand Jury of the United States Court, in session at Indianapolis, reported this fact to the Judge and desired instructions in the premises. "Judge Gresham reminded the jury that by their oaths they were bound to make presentment of this case in spite of the instructions of the president, whose power in criminal cases is restricted solely to the exercise of the pardoning prerogative after conviction has been had."

The result of the election in New York, says the Indianapolis Sentinel, discloses the fact that, notwithstanding the miserable wranglings in the democratic ranks, always fatal to success, the radical party is largely in the minority, and won its power by the division of its opponents, as following figures show:

Democratic vote, 352,069
National vote, 71,920

Total, 423,989

Radical vote, 389,676

Radical minority, 32,404

Such official statements are not calculated to give the radical party assurances of victory in 1880.

The Lafayette Courier will perhaps discover that the Indianapolis, Delphi and Chicago railroad, when finished from Indianapolis to Chicago, will carry something more than a "vigorous infant." The narrow gauge road can carry both passengers and freight one-third cheaper than the standard gauge. What will then become of that bankrupt corporation known as the "Kankakee Short Line?"—Delphi Times.

THE WAR OF THE RAILS.

The management of the Wabash railway recognize the fact that the completion of the Indianapolis, Delphi and Chicago road will remove the opportunity which they at present enjoy of squeezing the people of this vicinity by discrimination and extortion, and it is but natural that every obstacle should be thrown in the way of the new line. No active steps were taken, however, until Sunday last. The line of the narrow gauge crosses the Wabash track at the foot of Main street, in this city, and it was here the scene of the first skirmish in the war between the two roads. Several days since the engineers of the narrow gauge secured a conference with the Wabash management for the purpose of amicably adjusting any differences that might be found to exist. At this interview the Wabash representatives assumed a dictatorial spirit, and declared that under no circumstances would they permit a crossing to be established on a level with their track; the narrow gauge could pass either over or under the Wabash, but not on the same grade. Of course Mr. Gristle would listen to such an absurd proposition, and the conference abruptly terminated. The next move was a great blunder on the part of the Wabash, and one which ordinary discrimination should have taught them would have been readily checked. The State law denies any road the privilege of crossing a switch of another line. Of this the Wabash managers sought to take advantage, and on Sunday last they set a gang of men to work constructing a switch on the east side of the main track at the point of the proposed crossing. The first shovelful of dirt aroused the watching friends of the narrow gauge, and they at once took steps to prevent their line being overreached. Word was sent to Monticello and several teams supplied with iron and ties, were sent over, and about eleven o'clock p. m. the work of putting in the crossing was commenced. The Wabash force gave evidence of a willingness to resist, and a desperate war of words ensued, which by one or two arguments of a more substantial but scarcely superior convincing character. The agent at this point communicated with the managers of the road, and it is probable that this blood-ripping dispatches created at least a ripple of excitement among the officers of the line. An order was given the conductor of the 11:20 express to place his train on the track at the disputed point, and hold it there until further orders. Shortly afterward an engine, bearing Road Master Minor and other officials arrived from Lafayette. This engine was run up to the locomotive of the express, and the two thoroughly blocked the street crossing, but the work of laying the approaches of the narrow gauge track went on and by midnight was completed for some distance on each side. The windy war waxed fiercer at times, but the presence of the Sheriff and a legion of deputies, combined with an apparent desire upon the part of each of the contestants to avoid getting hurt or hurting anybody, served to preserve the peace. Shortly after twelve o'clock Judge Gould was aroused from his bed, and immediately issued an injunction restraining the narrow gauge authorities from proceeding with the work. This was followed immediately by a similar impressive order against the Wabash road. These decrees had the effect of quieting the excitement, and the gangs of laborers and looters on gradually dispersed. The case is set for hearing before Judge Gould on Monday. In the meantime the work will remain in its present shape—the Wabash switch incomplete, and the narrow gauge track laid no close to the Wabash rails on either side.

In the indecent haste of the Wabash management to put into practical operation their dog-in-the-manger policy, they neglected the important point of securing the permission of the City Council to construct a switch across Main street. Such an application would, however, have been useless, as our municipal legislators, like the great majority of our citizens, are not burdened with sympathy for the Wabash railway. At the request of Colonel Yeoman and numerous citizens, the Council met at midnight on Sunday, and promptly upon the stroke of twelve passed an ordinance granting the right of way to the I. D. & C. railroad. This was another point in favor of the narrow gauge, and every friend of fair dealing will echo the hope that the Council will decide the points involved upon the basis of justice and the interests of the people.

Gauge should cross the track of their road at the point located, and ultimately that the only course left us to pursue was to tunnel under their tracks. This was the unsatisfactory result of the interview and a day or so later men were set to work by the Wabash officers to extend their side tracks beyond the point of our crossing. This was the only consultation ever held or asked for between the officers of the Wabash and Narrow Gauge roads. I make this correction because I desire that the management of the I. D. & C. Railway shall stand before the people of this city fairly in the pending complications with the Wabash railway.
