

Quite a number of our friends have promised us wood a subscription. We need it now, and trust they will hesitate no longer about bringing it.

Wood, Corn, Oats, etc., will be accepted where promised in payment of subscriptions.

The Democrats have elected the Governor of Oregon, though they lost the electoral vote.

Snow fell all day Wednesday at Little Rock, Arkansas, a very unusual event in that region.

Candidates for postoffices in Iowa are keeping up jubilees over the election of Garfield.

Every State is represented in the national grange of Patrons of Husbandry now in session in Washington.

GENERAL GARFIELD has not yet sworn that he did not write the Morley letter, nor is that letter known to be forged by any judicial process.

Mr. Boyce, Supreme Court Clerk elect has appointed his late competitor, Gabriel Schmuck retiring clerk, to the position of first clerk in his office.

The Burlington Hawkeye has been admiring the man who loses a nickel under a plank sidewalk, and, feeling for it, picks up a raw bumble bee by the rudder.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., is proud of John Bodette, who, although 108 years of age, is still full of vitality. He can do like a boy, and recently walked twelve miles in four hours.

INGERSOLL, according to the Washington Star, being congratulated because he had been endorsed by Beecher, said: "I think it a good deal more fortunate for Mr. Beecher that I endorsed him."

INGERSOLL wants every Democrat in the employment of the Government turned off, which is strictly in consonance with the Flannagan idea, when he exclaimed in the Chicago Convention, "What are we after but for office?"

A girl only 8 years old was arrested for drunkenness at Lowell. To complete the disgraceful picture, the police let her lay ten hours insensible in a cell without attendance. If this had happened in the "solid south" what a howl the radical press would raise.

ALEXANDER MOULON, ex-Governor of Louisiana, is the oldest United States Senator now living, having served in that body under the administration of General Jackson. The Governor, though an octogenarian, retains his faculties, mental and physical, in a remarkable degree, except his vision, which is somewhat impaired.

The Chicago Times says:—"No great discernment is necessary to read the lines of Judge Noah Davis' decision in the Phillips case a notice to one James A. Garfield that the said Davis will be quite willing to accept a place upon the supreme bench at the first vacancy." So much for Judge Davis' anxiety and zeal to rule in a way to place a himself on the right side of the age of Mentor.

It is said no republican teacher has been employed in Newton township for the present term of schools.—Republican.

"It is said," on better authority than the above, that, politically the republicans have a majority of the teachers in Newton township, a fact not known until the above item led to an investigation. The trustee of the township never inquired into the political faith of the applicants.

Who Helped Elect Porter?

Two negroes were arrested last week in Lee County for robbing an old man who had sold his cotton in Tupelo and was returning home with his year's earnings. Upon their persons were found quite a full supply of Indiana Republican tickets, and these worthless concessions that they were just from Indiana, where they had assisted in electing Porter. As these colored gentlemen were in duress vilo on the 24 of November, the Garfield vote in Indiana will fall two short. This is a sad commentary on the "free elections" and "fair count" doctrines as preached by the Republican party.

The veteran philosopher Galileo, was compelled to go to Rome in the winter of 1633, where he languished some months in the prisons of the Inquisition, and was finally condemned to renounce, in the presence of an assembly of ignorant monks, kneeling before them, with his hand upon the Gospel, the great truths he had maintained. *Corda sincero et fide non flos abjura, maledictio et deceptor supradictos errores et hereses, was the formula which he was compelled to pronounce. At the moment when he arose, indignant at having sworn in violation of his firm conviction, he exclaimed, stamping his foot, Eppur si muove (and yet it moves). So with every true Democrat, recognizing the success and prosperity of the Government under the long rule of his party, when approached with reference to the continued defeat of his party, and solicited to abandon his path, he will declare with emphasis that the principles are correct, and defeat does not prove them false.*

The Eaton Tariff Commission

The following, from the Philadelphia Ledger, is opportune and to the point: "Whatever may be the result of the election as to members of Congress, the Eaton Tariff Commission bill ought to receive the earnest support of protectionists and free traders. Neither can afford to leave such a broad question in political economy to be the football of politicians at the polls and in Congress. Every item in the tariff of duties ought to be deliberately revised by a Commission of broad-minded experts, whether customs are to be laid for revenue purposes only, or for the protection of American industries. Congress ought to do, and, undoubtedly, will decide the principle upon which tariff duties shall be laid; as to the details for effecting this purpose the deliberate judgment of experts is required. Any one who will take the trouble to look over the list of duties now assessed, and reflect for a moment upon the intimate relation existing between some of the articles as they enter together into recognized American manufactures, of arts and manufactures, trade and commerce is required to prepare a tariff that will be beneficial in its effects. It is a revision of this kind that is wanted, and a commission such as Senator Eaton proposes is needed to compile data for the guidance of Congress, no matter what policy that body may choose to adopt."

Not Dead Yet.

To lukewarm and weak-kneed Democrat and a class of Republicans who are looking to the dismemberment of the grand old democratic party, we especially recommend the following brave words from Colonel John W. Forney. He says:

"I do not feel at all depressed. My support of General Hancock was entirely disinterested, and I regard his defeat as very unfortunate for the country. As I was not of the office and did not expect any honors I am not personally disappointed. The cause of defeat I attribute to one thing alone, the great racial. Garfield's election means the Empire—the empire of money, a local aristocracy. It means also, I think the re-election of General Grant in 1884. I shall part with reluctance from General Grant, but I mean to back up the Democratic party in the future. I shall at once advise them to reorganize and meet the Republicans at every step. The Democratic party is bound to obtain control eventually, although I may not live to see the day. I look down from this window on the people who are shouting themselves hoarse over Garfield, and simply pity them, for what would their lives have been worth in 1863 but for the man whom they were deriding and ridiculing and whom they succeeded in defeating?"

As the Colonel says, "The Democratic party is bound to control eventually." Its principles are to be thoroughly entwined and interwoven with the essential principles and foundations of the Constitution and the Government, for the party to ever die, until both the Constitution and the Government are overthrown and annihilated. When they go down, then the Democratic party goes down, but not until then. If, perchance, with the silent inroads upon the traditions and constitutional life of the Government that the Republican party are gradually making; if the people endorse its centralizing and consolidating tendencies, it may be that some form of Imperialism may grow out of it. In that case there will be no need or further mission for the Democratic party. Imperialism and finally some form of despotism will make an end of the old party and the present Government. To suppose the destruction of the democratic party, presupposes the destruction of the Constitution and the Government. The people, we are persuaded, will awaken from this strange lethargy which the hypocritical and false teachings of Republicanism have produced, and hurl its leaders from place and power into merited oblivion. Until then we must be content to wait.

JACOB MARBLE.

The life of Jacob Marble, whose death we announced in last week's HERALD, was an eventful one. He was born in the city of Baltimore in the year 1803, and was at his death in the 78th year of his age. At the age of sixteen he shipped as a sailor, and followed that vocation for about fifteen years. At the death of his father, his mother having died some years before, he abandoned his sailor life, and with his brother George and sister Jane, emigrated to the west, bringing with them an immense stock of dry goods, and locating at Delphi, with a branch at Wolf Point, Tippecanoe county, and by dint of industry and energy succeeded in building up a thriving business. But to be a successful merchant was not the ambition of the man; having been used to active out door life, at the age of twenty he left the store-room was irksome to the extreme, and having married to Miss Elizabeth Rovster, one of the belles of the new country, and a truly good and accomplished woman, he sold his interest in the store and with a part of the proceeds purchased a farm and invested the remainder in land, which was then to be had from the government at $1.25 per acre. In 1850 he removed to Jasper county and began the improvement of some of the lands he had entered, but ere he had fairly begun, in 1852, he was nominated by the democrats as their candidate for county treasurer, elected, and again in 1854, re-elected. At the close of his second term he removed south and located at Atlanta, Georgia, where he remained until the breaking out of the rebellion, when he returned and located here in Monticello. In all this time his ventures had been successful, and he had accumulated a comfortable competency, but a succession of reverses, the first of which was the purchase of a woolen mill in Bartholomew county, in litigation at the time of purchase, and which was burned down before he could realize any profit from it. This followed by an equally unprofitable investment here; the building of a woolen factory, which, the expensive machinery purchased for it, required an outlay beyond his means and, as a consequence, all was lost.

DEATH OF WM. REES.

[Inter-Ocean, Cor., Rochester, Ind., Nov. 16.] William Rees, an active politician, well known throughout this state, died very suddenly this evening, it is supposed from apoplexy. This attack, the third of the kind, was no doubt brought on by disappointment in the Presidential election, he being an extremist, politically, for a number of years. He has occupied different official positions. His age was about 70.
