

Reports again claim improvement in the President's condition.

Guiteau got up a little row with one of his guards in the prison the other day.

We invite the attention of our farmers to articles on first page of this Sentinel under the heading of "Swindlers at Work Among Indiana Farmers."

At the recent election in North Carolina, on the question of prohibition, Democrats were divided; Republicans were solid against it, and the negroes were furious in their opposition to what they termed "an attempt to rob them of their liberty."

A Dallas (Texas) correspondent of the New Orleans Democrat says: "It has been seriously suggested that Roseo Conkling be invited to quit New York, come to Texas and grow up with the country. If he could be induced to forget his sectional politics and become a broad, conservative statesman, he might do well in making this move."

Pitney, recently bounced from the Treasury Department by Secretary Windom, is to be provided with another berth in that institution. Gov. Foster hastened to Washington and told Windom that further investigation of Treasury stealings would be proclamation of Sherman's malfeasance and beat the Republican party in Ohio. And Republican civil service reform will have a rest until after the Ohio election.

Kentland News: This community was last week shocked by the news that Captain E. O'Brien was no more, and that on the 8th of August he died of abscess on the lung at his home in Berryville, Virginia.

The Captain was a warm-hearted gentleman and had a large circle of friends in Kentland. During his sojourn among us he displayed rare talents in his chosen profession, the law, in the practice of which he had a courteous and gentlemanly bearing, at once winning the respect and admiration of all.

He was not in the enjoyment of good health when he left Kentland last spring, and yet we were not prepared for his sudden demise. But the Captain is no more, and we, with others in Kentland, drop a tear of sympathy with the afflicted Mrs. O'Brien and other friends in their Virginia home.

Dan Platt referring to the late unpleasantness, among other things, remarks:

"It is on this account that idiots go to and fro over the land asserting that the Republican party should be continued in power because it saved the Union and freed 4,000,000 slaves. These are lies in one sentence. The Union has disappeared in the Nation with a big N, and the South freed the slaves by getting into a fight over them. The people got up in their wrath and suppressed the revolt at the point of the bayonet. The Republican organization got up its greed and robbed both rebels and negroes. The carpet-baggers, through appointment at Washington, got one hand into the pockets of the South, and through the Freedmen's Bureau and the Freedmen's Bank, felt with the other for the nickel of the negro."

Don tells vital truths in the above, but might have added much more to the detriment of the claims set up by the self-dubbed Union-savers.

A St. Louis special of the 18th says:

Senator Dan Voorhees is staying in St. Louis over night, on private business. With the late bulletins from Washington before him, he said: "I look upon Mr. Garfield's death as a most unmitigated misfortune, a calamity to the nation, family and the country. I do not mention the misfortune to the party, because that would be a blessing to the country. The circumstances that must follow his death would be deplorable, and it must be a source of grief and pain to any man who contemplates them to see that one weak and almost exhausted life is all that can forestall them."

"You do not look forward to Arthor's Presidency with much hopefulness?" he was asked.

"No, indeed. I do not. I regard it with great distrust, and I hope that no such misfortune will occur. It would be most unfortunate for the country generally."

"In what way?"

"Well, I hardly care to discuss this matter. I have spoken a great deal about it, and am still of the same mind. In the first place, I know that Arthur is a man utterly incapable of fulfilling the duties of the office properly. In the second place, I know that he is in the hands of a man who will do all in their power to control him and swerve him toward their ends and purposes. Thirdly, I know that he is a man who could be controlled without difficulty."

"You look upon his Presidency, then, as a national misfortune."

"Oh, it would be bad, very bad. I hope it may be averted. We can not afford to have Conkling at the head of affairs, which would be what it would amount to. Mr. Arthur is not the man for the place. His friends, who will become his advisers, are not the proper men to control this Nation. The result would be deplorable."

And this feeling of unrest seems to be all-pervading, and is not confined alone to Democrats and the opposition to radicalism. There is a lack of confidence in the ability, patriotism and honesty of the man who was given as a "son" to appease the wounded vanity of Conkling, and the disappointment of the Third-Termer."
