East.
The thriving manufacturing town of Haverhill, Mass., has been visited by a most destructive conflagration. Eighty-two shops and leather firms, representing $2,500,000, were swept out of existence, and 2,000 people thrown out of work. The blaze originated in a frame building used as a leather store. Adjoining buildings were also of wood, and a fire from the north carried the burning wood for blocks. The bursting of some hose in the early stages of the fire also served to hamper the firemen. One national bank and two savings banks were destroyed, two persons are known to have perished, and six hundred families rendered homeless. The insurance is light in proportion to the losses.

The Albion print works, in Philadelphia, and the stocks of several firms in the same building, were swept away by fire. A charred corpse was found on the second floor. The loss foot up $150,000.

By the burning of the east wing of the insane asylum at Flatbush, L. I., one patient was suffocated and three escaped from custody.
