Cranky W. Lee, now on the Elwood Review, formerly for a short period an employee of the Rensselaer Republican, still entertains his low estimate of the qualifications of his Bro. Marshall. While engaged on the Republican he employed his leisure moments in exhibitions of his expert management of a typewriter, and in bemoaning the lack of ability in the Republicen management, and significantly insinuating that his connection with it would to a certain extent elevate it. In a late number of the Review he volunteers aid to the Republican, as follows:

The Republican, the only really truly newspaper published in Jasper county, is in fine condition, and the only fault we find with Bro. Marshall is that he stoops to notice the slanderous attacks on him that are being published in the Sentinel of that place. The attacks of the Sentinel ought to be beneath his notice for the reason that they are untrue—base insinuations—and a reply only serves to advertise the Sentinel. Mr. Marshall is well and favorably known to his readers, and no amount of lying can harm him.—[Elwood Review.

Bro. Marshall grabs at the bait, and blurts out—"Faithful are the wounds of a friend," and satisfies his readers that Cranky has made a "damphool" of him, and sniffingly adds, "We thank Bro. Lee for the bitter in the above paragraph as well as for the sweet; for the i-buke as well as for the commendation," and wiping the tears from his eyes, gaily concludes: "however we promise never to do again—at least hardly ever." Our weeping brother committed a great error in not giving the Review, in general, and Cranky W. Lee, in particular, a commendable puff. Cranky had two objects in view in tendering his assistance, 1st—in his conceit, to help our neighbor in the hour of his weakness and trouble. 2d.—To receive a complimentary notice in return.—The establishment of a kind of Mutual Admiration.

Ellis Walton returned from Kansas Wednesday evening. He is much pleased with his visit.
