That Sausage.

A clergyman in a Southern State was on his way to preach a funeral sermon. As he was passing the house of a widow lady, a member of his congregation, she ran out and stopped him, saying, as they had just slaughtered their hogs, she had put up a few pounds of sausage as a present, adding that, as she had put it in double paper pockets, she thought it would not soil his clothes. He thanked her earnestly for her kindness, and rode on, having put the parcel in his pocket.

All the time he was officiating at the grave a large, half-starved hound kept snuffing around him, sometimes approaching alarmingly near, attracted by the scent of the fresh meat. As the deceased was a man of some prominence, there was a considerable crowd collected, and great mourning and lamentation came from the family group; so no one paid any attention to the movements of the animal, but all noticed with concern—or he was beloved by his congregation—the great pallor of the clergyman, and the beads of perspiration standing upon his brow, and they began to whisper to each other that Mr. H— must be ill.

After the interment they all proceeded to the church, where the funeral sermon was to be preached. Just before entering, Mr. H— turned round to ascertain the whereabouts of his tormentor, when lo! there he was, not far from him, but the crowd prevented him from approaching too closely. Just at this moment some one gave the poor creature a cruel kick, which sent him off howling. When the minister reached his pulpit—one of those old-fashioned affairs ascended by a short, steep flight of steps—he breathed more freely. He was just about to commence his duties when the sexton, a good old man, came noiselessly up the steps with a slip of paper in his hand, which he wished to give to the minister, but who was unnoticed by that gentleman, though seen by all the congregation. He gently twitched his coat to attract his attention. A thrill of horror passed over the unhappy preacher at the dreadful thought that the dog had entered unseen in the crowd, and was now about to take forcible possession of the sausage before the whole assembly; so, hoping to drive him away, he kicked back cautiously but vigorously, and struck the old man in the breast, who rolled down the steps.

Seeing the look of surprise and alarm on the faces of the audience, he stammered out, with crimson face: "I must explain to you, my brethren, what must seem my intemperate conduct. A friend came out to me, as I was passing her house, with a small package of sausage for me to carry home in my pocket; but ever since I dismounted from my horse this old dog"—pointing behind to the prostrate sexton, but without looking round—"has been following me, and at length came into the pulpit, and has been tugging at my coat, determined to get the sausage from my pocket."

At this moment the sexton, a little stunned and a little hurt, arose from the floor, and the minister at a glance took it all in, stared wildly at him, took a drink of water, turned very pale, and sat down, overwhelmed with consternation.—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine.

"If I Only Had Capital."

In all sections of all lands we find a class of people, mostly young men, who are good talkers, but very poor workers. They are constantly bemoaning their lot in life, and grieve because they were not born with a silver spoon in their mouth. They stand on the street corners or loaf in the billiard and pool rooms, and, like Micawber, are constantly waiting for something to turn up, never themselves putting forth the first effort to turn anything up. "Oh, if I had capital, I'd show you how I made money. I'd invest in this enterprise or that industry, and soon it would be bringing me in handsome returns, and then I would be living, and not dragging out a mere existence; but this getting along without money is what I never could do, and I never expect to know how." Such is the soliloquy of many young men who reside not a thousand miles from Portsmouth.

To all such, should they peruse these lines, we would say: "You are the architect of your own fortune," and you are and can be just exactly what you want to be, and what you are willing to work to attain unto. Money is not all the capital that is necessary as a stepping-stone to success. Any young man who has his bodily and mental health, and a mind of at least some culture, has capital that many of the moneyed men never possessed, and if he will only utilize this God-given capital with vim, force, and push, he will thereby be enabled, under ordinary circumstances, to lay up for himself some of that other kind of capital which is so essential to one's happiness and comfort in everyday life. What our young men of to-day need is not so much money as it is the push and energy to earn it. Then when it comes in the reward of their own labors, they will appreciate its value more and know how to save it, and by assiduous toil perhaps some day they may have the capital the lack of which they so much bemoan at the present day.

Then, young man, go to work, cease loafing on the street corners and public saloons, and use the God-given capital you have at your command, and this may be a means to a desirable end. At any rate, don't forever stand crying, "If I had capital," when all the talents you have are depreciating in value for the want of proper exercise.—Portsmouth (Va.) Times.

A DOSE of Red Star Cough Cure will prevent you disturbing the congregation and put you in a right frame of mind to enjoy the services. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Life at Rome in St. Paul's Day.

The condition of the lower classes rendered them more hopeful subjects for the ennobling influences of the faith of Christ. It is true that they also lived in the midst of abominations. But to them vice stood forth in all its bare and revolting hideousness, and there was no wealth to gild its anguishing reactions. Life and its temptations wore a very different aspect to the master who could lord it over the souls and bodies of a thousand helpless minions, and to the wretched slave who was the victim of his caprice and tyranny. As in every city where the slaves far outnumbered the free population, they had to be kept in subjection by laws of terrible severity. It is no wonder that in writing to a church of which so many members were in this sad condition, St. Paul thought it necessary to warn them of the duty of obedience and honor toward the powers that be. The house of a wealthy Roman contained slaves of every rank, of every nation, and of every accomplishment, who could be numbered, not by scores, but by hundreds. The master might kill or torture his slaves with impunity; but if one of them, goaded to passionate revenge by intolerable wrong, ventured to raise a hand against his owner, the whole family, with their wives and children, however innocent, were put to death. The Roman lady looked lovely at the banquet, but the slave girl who arranged a curl wrong had already been branded with a hot iron. The triclinia of a banquet might gleam with jeweled and myrrhine cups, but if a slave did but drop by accident one crystal vase he might be flung, then and there, to feed the lampreys in his master's fish pond. The senator and the knight might lope upon cushions in the amphitheater, and look on luxuriously at the mad struggles of the gladiators; but to the gladiator this meant the endurance of all the detestable savagery of the lanista, and the taking of a horrible oath that, "like a genuine gladiator," he would allow himself to be bound, burned, beaten, or killed at his owner's will. There were, doubtless, many kind masters at Rome; but the system of slavery was in itself irredeemably degrading, and we cannot wonder, but can only rejoice, that, from Caesar's household downward, there were many in this condition who found in Christian teaching a light and peace from heaven. However low their earthly lot, they thus attained to a faith so sure and so consolatory that in the very catacombs they surrounded the grim memorials of death with emblems of peace and beauty, and made the ill-spelt jargon of their quaint illiterate epitaphs the expression of a radiant happiness and an illimitable hope.—Anon.

A Mystery.

How the human system ever recovers from the bad effects of the noxious medicines often literally poured into it for the supposed relief of dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, rheumatism, and other ailments, is a mystery. The mischief done by bad medicine is scarcely less than that caused by disease. If they who are weak, bilious, dyspeptic, constipated, or rheumatic would often be guided by the experience of invalids who have thoroughly tested Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, they would in every instance obtain the speediest aid derivable from rational medication. This medicine is a searching and at the same time a thoroughly safe remedy, derived from vegetable sources, and possessing, in consequence of its basis of pure spirits, properties as a medicinal stimulant not to be found in the fiery local bitters and stimulants often resorted to by the debilitated, dyspeptic, and languid.

Cuvier on Tight Lacing.

The great naturalist, Cuvier, was walking one day with a young lady, who was a victim of tight lacing, in a public garden in Paris. A lovely blossom upon an elegant plant drew from her an expression of admiration. Looking at her pale, thin face, Cuvier said: "You were like this flower once; to-morrow it will be as you are now." Next day he led her to the same spot and the beautiful flower was dying. She asked the cause. "This plant," replied Cuvier, "is an image of yourself. I will show you what is the matter with it." He pointed to a cord bound tightly around the stem and said: "You are fading away exactly in the same manner under the compression of your corset, and you are losing by degrees all your youthful charms, just because you have not the courage to resist this dangerous fashion."

An electric spark in a dusty atmosphere causes the dust to settle, and if the air be smoky, clears it up. This is probably one reason why the air seems so clear when snuffed after a thunderstorm, even though there has been but little rain.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

"Gentle as the Breeze of Evening."

This line of an old hymn is quite appropriate when applied to "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." "I don't like to take pills if I can avoid it," we often hear people say, "because they constipate me so." Now the "Pellets" never do this. They are so gentle and mild that their effect is almost precisely similar to a natural movement of the bowels, and no unpleasant effects are left behind.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

A Distressed General.

What General causes more distress, is more prevalent, and spreads more dismay? General Want. If it was from the want of sound lungs Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein would out-general it.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Cassell, Hazard & Co., of New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

An Undoubted Blessing.

About thirty years ago a prominent physician by the name of Dr. William Hall discovered, or produced after long experimental research, a remedy for diseases of the throat, chest and lungs, which was of such wonderful efficacy that it soon gained a wide reputation in this country. The name of the medicine is DR. WM. HALL'S BALSM FOR THE LUNGS, and may be safely relied on as a speedy and positive cure for coughs, colds, sore throat, etc.
