Official Cats.

Three hundred and odd cats are maintained by the United States Government, the cost of their support being carried as a regular item on the accounts of the Postoffice Department. They are distributed among about fifty postoffices, and their duty is to keep rats and mice from eating postal matter and mail sacks. Their work is of the utmost importance wherever large quantities of mail are collected—as, for example, at the New York postoffice, where from 2,000 to 3,000 bags of such material are commonly stored away in the basement.

Formerly great rodents were often driven by mischievous boys who threw holes in the sacks, and thought nothing of boring clear through bags of letters in a night. Troubles of this sort no longer occur, now that the official pussies keep watch. Each city postmaster is allowed from $8 to $40 a year for the keep of his feline staff, sending his estimate for "cat meat" to Washington at the beginning of each quarter.

Cats are kept in all the Government buildings at Washington. In that of the State, War, and Navy Departments they are employed not only to protect the priceless papers stored there but to guard against fire. Twice the War Department has been set afire by rats gnawing matches—one of these occasions in the office of the Secretary of War in the middle of the night. The White House has two cats, one a black and white female, kept in the kitchen, and the other a black tom, kept in the stable.

But the Capitol is the greatest place in Washington for cats. The huge building swarms with them and at night they scamper about in troops. Nobody knows how many of them there are, but the watchmen reckon them by scores. They are all vagrants and wild as hawks. In the summer they are scattered about the neighborhood to some extent, but in the winter they gather within the building. At about 10 o'clock every night they begin a mad racing through the empty corridors, which are made to resound with their cries.

His Brain Covered by a Plaster.
Sam McKit, a negro, at Poplar Grove, Ark., is a living curiosity. Some time in August he was sitting near a fire. He had a fit and fell on the fire, his head striking a heap of red coals. His face, neck and head were tell off, but the rest was broken to pieces and a piece of the skull as large as a man's hand came off. He is now up and the flesh wounds are healing. He has a plaster over the brain and anyone can see the brain when the plaster is off.

To Help London Workmen.
Distress among the unemployed laboring people in London is very great. Rt. Hon. Henry H. Fowler, president of the local Government Board, has prepared a circular advising the local authorities to modify it by making roads, constructing sewers and cleaning the streets, paying the men employed to do the work regular day's wages. The authorities, he adds, should aim to be useful to labor and avoid making paupers of those out of work.

Loaded Revolvers Stood Guard.
Two loaded revolvers prevented the saving of $100 in a burning house in Westerville, Ohio, a few days ago. The money, which was in gold, was concealed under a carpet in a bed-room, and on a bureau in the same room lay the revolvers, pointing toward the entrance. No one would dare enter the room. No trace of the money could be found after the house burned.

Natural Grammar.
A class in grammar was reciting, and one of the younger boys was asked to compare "sick."

He began thoughtfully "sick," paused while his brain struggled with the problem, then finished triumphantly: "Sick, worse, dead."

Apples for Alcoholism.
A German doctor has started the theory that most drunkards can be cured simply by eating apples every meal. The acid of the fruit does it.

The Insane of the Land.
The Superintendent of the Census makes public a bulletin in which are given statistics upon the subjects of asylums for the insane in the United States. The bulletin shows that the total number of insane persons treated in both public and private institutions during the year 1889 was 97,655, while during the year 1881 there were 56,200 treated, showing an increase in the like years of 41,850 or 75.82 per cent.

HANGED THOUGH INNOCENT.

One of the Most Sensational Judicial Murders of the Century.

The most sensational judicial murder of this century was the execution of Eliza Fanning, in her time one of the most beautiful women of London. She was scarcely eighteen when charged with poisoning the family in which she was a governess. It was proven conclusively that she herself had become ill from eating the poisoned food. Her innocence was established at the trial, but the recorder before whom the case was heard conceived so great a prejudice that in his final charge he passed only upon the evidence against her. She was executed, and as she stood robes in white on the scaffold, seen two old offenders who were suffering a like doom. She cried: "Before the just and Almighty God, and by the faith of the holy sacrament, I have received, I am innocent of the offense of which I am charged."

Before the funeral it was discovered that the poison was in all likelihood administered by a maniac who had been sheltered in the house at the time of the poisoning. Ten thousand persons attacked the house of the prosecuting lawyer, and only a large military force prevented death and destruction by the infuriated mob. On the day of the funeral half of London appeared on the streets through which the cortage passed, and only the presence of troops prevented another riot.

About Hotels.

"I have lived fifty-six years; I have been twice around the globe and broken bread in every city and town from Tadmor in the Wilderness to Salt Lake City, and I have yet to see a man who did not believe that as a hotel-keeper he towered, like Saul, above his brethren," said F. J. Sanders, now lingering at the Laclede. "It is an hallucination that I can not understand. Every hotel-keeper is as proud of his hotel as though the palace of Macsenas were smoke-house by comparison, the Olympian banquets but beggars fare compared with his princely board. I have sat down to eat beside which Shad's shad fillet was adusto, waterlogged potato butter that would knock a Digger Indian out with one stomach blow and biscuit that might be used to crack walnuts with, then had the landlord slap me on the shoulder and tell me about celebrities coming a hundred miles to Sunday with him. Twain made an irreparable, an inexcusable mistake in not picturing Col. Mulberry Sellers as a hotel-keeper. I once stopped at a hotel at Homer, Ill., where the bill of fare consisted of 'greens,' fat bacon and tough radishes. After dinner the landlord told me that he 'fancied' that Delmoniker seller was not so far ahead of his hash foundry after all."

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

May we think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have these money which was in gold, was concealed under a carpet in a bed-room, and on a bureau in the same room lay the revolvers, pointing toward the entrance. No one would dare enter the room. No trace of the money could be found after the house burned.
