

NEURALGIA OF THE HEART

THE TERRIBLE DISEASE THAT ATTACKED MRS. HENRY OSTING.

Slowly Losing Her Life—Physicians Were Powerless—Friends Were Helpless—At Last She Found a Remedy with Which She Cured Herself and Laughed at Physicians.

From the New Era, Greenburg, Ind.
Hearing through Messrs. Ripley & Co., druggists, of Sunman, Ripley County, Ind., that Mrs. Osting, wife of Henry Osting, a prominent and influential citizen of that town, had been cured of a bad case of neuralgia of the heart and stomach, the editor of the New Era determined to know for the satisfaction of himself and the benefit of his readers the truth in regard to the matter, and took advantage of a trip to Sunman last week.

The Osting residence is a very handsome one, and on every hand are seen the footprints of good fortune. Mrs. Osting herself, hale and hearty, invited us into her cozy parlor. One could hardly believe by looking at the lady, who showed all signs of good health, that she was but nine months ago a dependent victim of that dread disease, neuralgia of the heart and stomach. In answer to the question if she had been cured of a bad disease of neuralgia by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as to whether she objected to an interview, she replied in her pleasant way, "Why, sir, I don't, for they've done me such a wonderful good that I feel I owe everything to them." And the statement was to be believed, for she was the example of perfect health, and we were informed by her neighbors and friends that but a short while ago she was only a living corpse.

Mrs. Osting continued: "No, sir, I never did have good health; I was always naturally weak. When quite young I began experiencing trouble from my heart and stomach, which the doctors said was neuralgia. I was continually suffering great pain, but not one of the many well-known physicians from whom I received treatment was able to do me any good. Severe, sharp pains would shoot over my entire body, and more severely through my heart and stomach. My entire system became nervous as pains would increase; my appetite began to fail, and for weeks I could not eat a meal—just mince over the victuals. I couldn't sleep, and would only pass the nights in agony. It's a wonder that I kept up at all. By the time I had tried every medicine that I could hear of, that was claimed to be good for my troubles, but not one did me the least good. Finally, I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and our druggist, Mr. Ripley, advised me to try them, for he said they had done so many people good. I had no faith in patent medicines then, for none had done me any good, but I thought I would try them, for surely they couldn't hurt me. I found relief immediately after I began taking them, and the longer I took them the better I felt. By the time I used six boxes I was entirely cured. I never had been able to do my work before. I began taking the pills last October, and in December I was well and able to do my work. I can truly say, for the benefit of other sufferers, that I owe my health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

To confirm her story beyond all doubt, Mrs. Osting made the following affidavit:

State of Indiana, County of Ripley, ss:
I, Mrs. Henry Osting, being duly sworn on her oath, depose and say that the foregoing statement is just and true.

MRS. HENRY OSTING.
Sworn and subscribed before me, July 20, 1895.

Grace before Meat.

There's a difference between being full of thanksgiving, and being full of Thanksgiving dainties. But the one thing generally leads to the other. How can it be helped when the turkey is so good, and the pie so enticing? Here's a helpful hint. For that full feeling after Thanksgiving—take a pill. Not any pill, mind you. There are pills that won't help you. Take the pill that will. It's known as Ayer's Pill—and it's perfect. It is sugar-coated, pleasant to the palate, and its operation, like that of nature, is effective and without violence. Keep this in your mind if you want to enjoy the holiday season: Grace before meat, but a Pill after Pie.

BOUTEILHE AND HIS BOMB.

The Recent Outrage at MM. Rothschild's Bank in Paris.

The man who threw the bomb at MM. de Rothschild's bank in the Rue Lafitte, Paris, is not an anarchist. He is one of those discontented individuals who consider that their talents ought to have raised them to high positions, and who neglect the humbler work they have before them. Marie Andre Victor Leon Bouteilhe—to give the criminal's name in full—is the son of one of the "officers" of the Commune. He was educated at a Paris lycee, but he never distinguished himself, and at the age of 18 he enlisted in a regiment of Algerian Tirailleurs, with whom he remained five years. On his return he found some employment, and in 1893 he was taken into the service of the Western Railway Company, and passed into several offices at Courbevoie, Saint Cloud and Asnières.

It appears, however, that his conduct was anything but satisfactory, and after several reprimands from his superiors Bouteilhe left his situation. Being thus thrown out of employment, and greatly in want of money, he went to live at his mother's house in the Rue Montparnasse. Mme. Bouteilhe, who lives with her two daughters, is much respected by her friends and acquaintances, while her daughters are hard-working girls, one being employed in a bank, the other in a telephone office. The extravagant talk of Bouteilhe went unheeded by his mother and sisters, and they experienced a great shock on hearing of the perpetrator of the Rue Lafitte outrage was one of Bouteilhe's favorite topics. One of Bouteilhe's country giving a man an education and then leaving him without employment.

The bomb was fabricated by Bouteilhe alone in a thicket in the Bois de Vincennes. The prisoner at first hinted that he had accomplices, and also gave a false account of the composition of the bomb. The three tradesmen of whom he purchased the materials have recognized him, and subsequently Bouteilhe declared that he committed the deed as a protest against the rich, and without any assistance, but he denied that he sent the explosive letter.

He was a great admirer of Vaillant and Emile Henry, and sometimes expressed himself in favor of their sort of "propaganda," and of a general strike. He was a conceited fellow, and on one occasion, when advised to go into trade, he exclaimed, "Trade disgusts me." Bouteilhe detested work that soiled his hands, and on the same occasion he cried, "Was I made for those jobs?" His ambition was to enter one of the big Parisian stores as a clerk.—New York Herald.

OF VALUE TO SPORTSMEN.

An Adjustable Choke Muzzle and the Two-Eyed Sight.

One of the greatest improvements in the history of the gun, or fowling piece, as it was first called, was the introduction by old Joe Manton of what is termed choke. The choke system has its drawbacks, nevertheless. The principal one is that while the unchoke cylinder will not kill at much over 40 yards, the choked gun at that distance shoots like a rifle, the shot flying so close as to become almost a bullet, necessitating a very close aim, and sometimes riddling a bird with the amount of shot poured into it. In European covert shooting the sport varies from rabbits in a bunch of gorse, getting up at 20 yards, to the sportsman where the pheasant rockets at 50 to 60 yards above the tree tops and goes like the wind. To meet these exigencies it has always been necessary for the sportsman to have two guns, one choke and one adjustable.

ADJUSTABLE CHOKE MUZZLE.

most cylinder. They have, in some cases, been partly met by having two sets of barrels differently bored for the same gun, so that they can be changed at will according to the game to be shot. The latest solution of the problem is called the adjustable muzzle, and is, as its name implies, a muzzle of about three inches in length, forming practically an extension of the barrels already on the gun, and capable of being adjusted by the shooter, so that when the muzzle is adjusted to the game at once kills to the greater distance desired. The attaching of the muzzle to the barrel is done by a lock screw at the upper part of the barrels, and by a peculiar and very close fitting screw which passes through the full length of the adjustable muzzle into a solid receptacle (threaded) for it, in the rib between the barrels. This is calculated to hold it perfectly secure and gas tight. To the wild fowler in the coming season, especially, this will be useful, as when the fowls leave the open water and take to the sedges a different gun is generally desired.

Another item, while not exactly new, has been of late years so much improved that it may almost be ranked as new. This is the two-eyed sight. It was invented by a butler in an English nobleman's family, who was first struck by the remark of an eminent London oculist to the effect that nearly 73 per cent of men had defective vision. This fact made the butler, whose name was Gilbert, think about the number of poor shots there were among the English gentry. After numberless experiments he evolved a rather crude arrangement of two things like small square needles a sixteenth of an inch thick, one about five inches long, the other about three inches long, which were fixed on the rib between the barrels of a gun near the sight, and were expected to remedy the defective left eye and regulate the right. He managed to get the Earl of Grey, the famous running rifle shot; the Marquis of Ripon, Lord Munson, Sir Ralph Payne Calvey and others to take the thing up, try it, and report on it, and in almost every case the report was very favorable, to the effect that it certainly did improve the shooting. Outside of these experts the rank and file of gunners would take no stock in it. It was claimed, and with reason, that the average wing shot never saw the gun with two-eyed sight in position sights on a shotgun, anyhow. A few experiments evolved a number of curious things, one of which was that the muzzle of a gun or rifle could be pushed through the crown of a stovepipe hat from the inside to the outside, so that the muzzle projected six inches, and that while the left eye was shut it was impossible to aim with any certainty, the hat blocking the sight, when the left eye was opened it was possible not only to aim, but also to see the sight on the end of the barrels, the hat practically becoming transparent.

Two Reasons.

At a circuit court held some years ago in a Western State an action of ejectment was tried "by the court without a jury." The decision rendered was couched in such a way that it caused considerable amusement.

The suit was brought by a religious society to recover possession of a cemetery. The defendant was a physician in active practice, who, as one of a committee appointed by the church, had bought the ground for the use of the society.

Afterward he severed his connection with the society, and it was found that he had taken the title in his own name, and intended to appropriate the premises for his private use. The defendant insisted that he had bought the ground in his own right after his relations to the society had ceased.

The court, after hearing the evidence and arguments, proceeded to state the grounds for his decision, and ordered judgment for the plaintiff. Whereupon the defendant's counsel arose, and asked the court to state more fully the reasons for the decision.

"Certainly," said his honor, promptly. "But as you have heard what I have said, I have only two additional reasons to give. One is that the church seems to need a cemetery, and the other that the doctor has failed to show that his practice is sufficiently large to make it necessary for him to keep a burying ground of his own."

Misquoted Lines.
It is a peculiar faculty of human memory to misquote proverbs and poetry, and almost invariably to place the credit where it does not belong. We give below a few familiar expressions that are generally misquoted:

Nine out of ten think that "the Lord tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" is from the Bible, whereas Laurence Sterne is the author. "Pouring oil upon the troubled waters" is also ascribed to the sacred volume, whereas it is not there; in fact, no one knows its origin.

Nothing is more common than to hear—

A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still.

This is an impossible condition of mind, for no one can be convinced of one opinion, and at the same time hold to an opposite one. What Butler wrote was eminently sensible:

He that complies against his will is of his own opinion still.

A famous passage of scripture is often misquoted thus: "He that is without sin among you let him cast the first stone." It should be, "Let him first cast a stone."

Sometimes we are told, "Behold how great a fire a little matter kindleth!" whereas St. James said, "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth," which is quite a different thing.

We also hear that "a miss is as good as a mile," which is not as sensible nor as forcible as the true proverb, "A miss of an inch is as good as a mile."

"Look before you leap," should be, "Look before you are leapt."

Pope is generally credited with having written—

Immodest words admit of no defense, For want of decency is want of sense, though it would puzzle anyone to find the verse in his writings. They were written by the Earl of Roscommon, who died before Pope was born.

Scott's Emulsion makes cod-liver oil taking next thing to a pleasure. You hardly taste it. The stomach knows nothing about it—it does not trouble you there. You feel it first in the strength that it brings: it shows in the color of the cheek, the rounding of the angles, the smoothing of the wrinkles.

It is cod-liver oil digested for you, slipping as easily into the blood and losing itself there as rain-drops lose themselves in the ocean.

What a satisfactory thing this is—to hide the odious taste of cod-liver oil, evade the tax on the stomach, take health by surprise.

There is no secret of what it is made of—the fish-fat taste is lost, but nothing is lost but the taste.

The Battle of the Giants was another name given to the battle of Marignano in 1515, between the allied French and Venetians and the allied Italian and Swiss armies. The latter were defeated with great slaughter, over 12,000 of their troops being left on the field. The victors lost 4,000. The battle was given the name by Trivulzio, a soldier and historian, who was present.
