

The Caretaker.
Caretaker is a word adopted into modern use and means one who takes care of, and is very generally applied to those employed to take care of things committed to their keeping. The word is not new, but it is very suggestive of the need of a caretaker. The human body to such is a mansion filled with precious things uncarved for, where thieves may break in and rust and rot. Pains and aches are thieves, and the body left unattended to their spoils will be robbed of all its comforts and despoiled of its peace of mind and happiness. It is a happy thought to look upon St. Jacobs Oil as a caretaker, to employ it as a watchman against such intruders. There is hardly an ache, from a toothache to a toothache, that it can't take care of and effect a cure, and pains the most violent are conquered by its use. Its office as a caretaker is to prevent the spread of aches and pains into a chronic state. Keep a bottle of it in the hand-drawer, and you will be assured of good care and comfort.

Has to Do It.

That Is It.

A Successful Business.
A proprietary medicine to be really successful must have some intrinsic worth. Without this, advertising, however extensive, avails nothing. Among the most successful medicines that have been found worthy of all the merits claimed for them are Dr. Radway's Remedies, established and used for nearly half a century. They have become household medicines throughout the world. In some places, sparsely settled, where doctors are difficult to obtain, people, by the judicious use of Dr. Radway's medicines, keep themselves in health. Then, again, there are physicians who, in their practice, use Dr. Radway's Remedies, obtaining better results than when using their own prescriptions. Radway's Ready Relief, Radway's Pills and Radway's Sarsaparilla. Resolvent, three different medicines, being a complete medicine chest in themselves, are used each for different phases of disease.—Chattanooga Times Nov. 14, 1897.

FLORENCE MARYATT

CHAPTER XXIV.
Sir Wilfrid felt as if he could not leave Chelsea before he had an explanation with Jane. But, on second thoughts, he decided to go. The girl had had sufficient excitement for one day. She was totally unaware that Sir Wilfrid had overheard anything at a moment when she believed herself to be alone. And consequently she was quite unprepared for the searching catechism to which he subjected her as soon as they met.

She had been suffering all night from one of her nervous headaches, was still in her dressing gown, with her brown hair loose upon her shoulders, when Sir Wilfrid came. "Why did you come over this morning?" said Jane, compassionately. "You should have stayed at home and rested your leg. I am afraid I must have seemed very ungrateful yesterday, not to have thanked you better for the great service you did us; but I had no idea that you were hurt."

"And I had no wish that you should know it," he answered, seating himself. "And indeed, my bruises are not worth so much pity at your hands. My valet is an excellent nurse, and he rubbed in some liniment last night which has almost set me right again. Jane, when I first saw Nellie I asked you whose child she was, and you said you did not know. Was that the truth?"

The woman looked as if she had been caught in a trap, but though taken utterly aback by the question, she made a gallant effort to escape. "I told you that some one put her over our garden wall when she was a little baby, and we found her in the ily bed—at least, nothing more than a baby, but to whom the child belonged. That is the truth."

"I don't want to hear anything about your mother. I want to hear you say that you do not know Nellie's parents. Yes," she said in a low voice; "you must know it, that is the truth. But no one else knows it. No one suspects it even, unless it is Miss Prosser. Nellie is my child."

"Dear little Nellie!" said Sir Wilfrid musingly; "my sweet child! There must have been some instinct in my heart to tell me she was mine, for I don't remember ever caring for an infant before. I shall love her doubly now. My own little girl!"

A sudden terror seemed to grip the mother's heart. She rose up from her chair, and turned upon him like an animal at bay. "You will not take her from me!" she cried fiercely.

"Sir Wilfrid placed his hand upon her arm and forced her to reseat herself. "No—no," he replied, soothingly, "you need not fear. I have not the power, Jane, even if I had the intention. You poor unrecognized mothers have one advantage over those who stand higher in the world's esteem than yourselves. Your wrongs set you above the tyranny or the cruelty of your in-laws, and your children are your own. How could you think so base a thing of me, Jane? Has that one wicked act of mine changed my whole character in your estimation?"

"Thank heaven!" ejaculated Jane, as she lay back in the chair and closed her eyes. "Jane," said Sir Wilfrid, "those two words are the very bitterest reproach your lips could have conveyed to me."

"Listen to me, Will," she said, firmly, though gently, "and then answer me as I feel. I have not the power, Jane, even if I had the intention. You poor unrecognized mothers have one advantage over those who stand higher in the world's esteem than yourselves. Your wrongs set you above the tyranny or the cruelty of your in-laws, and your children are your own. How could you think so base a thing of me, Jane? WHAT 1897 HAS SEEN.

RECORD OF THE IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE YEAR.
Greece-Turkish War and the Cuban Insurrection—The Great Strike in the Coal Fields—Political Changes of Twelve Months.

A Chronological Table.
The year 1897 has been, it might be said, almost a commonplace one, since its commencement, that is, no events of overwhelming moment have taken place, but there has been no dearth of important occurrences. The war between Turkey and Greece, the struggle for freedom in Cuba, the Ohio and Pennsylvania coal strike in the United States, the change of national administration, the enactment of the Dingley tariff law, the disastrous spring floods in the Mississippi valley and autumn fires in the West and Northwest, and the epidemic of yellow fever in the Southern States are clearly not matters of small importance in the history of the world. What Dr. Rauwolf Did.
Coffee is said to have been introduced into Europe by Dr. A. Rauwolf, a German physician, about the middle of the sixteenth century. He got it from Arabia, after it had passed into that country from Abyssinia. It is a pity, for coffee is one of those seductive stimulants which do harm under the disguise of seeming to do temporary good. It is a nerve poison on the same principle that alcohol is, and never affects the nerves. Those who have tried Grain-O say nothing can induce them to resume the use of coffee. Good for children as for adults. Cost, one-fourth that of coffee. Packages 15c. and 25c. Ask your grocer for it.

His Views of Life.
"I'm very sorry," said the young lady, "but your views of life are such that I could not think of accepting them as my own."
"Never mind," he replied; "practice makes perfect, you know, and I may be able to satisfy you in time."
Then he went into the house and a few moments later returned with his camera, with which he proceeded to take a few more views.

Rush to the Klondike.
The railroads are confidently expecting a big rush of travel to the Klondike in the spring. It is estimated that fully 100,000 people will attempt to reach the gold fields as soon as the winter is over, and with a desire to turn a nifty penny at every opportunity trunk lines are beginning to prepare for the expected rush.
One of the first in the field is the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which will on Tuesday, Dec. 21, begin the running of the through tourist car from New York City to San Francisco without change by way of Philadelphia, Washington, Parkersburg and Cincinnati, reaching St. Louis Wednesday evening, Texarkana Thursday afternoon, El Paso, Tex., Friday evening and San Francisco Sunday morning.

This service is in addition to the one provided by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from Pittsburgh by way of Cincinnati and the Illinois Central to New Orleans and the Southern Pacific through to the coast, the Pittsburgh car leaving every Wednesday. The New York car on its return leaves San Francisco Monday evening and the Pittsburgh car leaves on Thursday.
