HERE AND THERE.

Said a gentleman to a News man: "It is noticeable that funerals of those well known and in moderate circumstances are more largely attended than those of wealth. Not infrequently one sees a string of fifty carriages following some friend or relative. This is all very well if those who hire the carriages can afford it, but too often money is spent for carriage hire that has been saved for family necessities, and after the expenditure a general course of scrimping must follow. Debts to our friends should be paid before death, and afterward all respect and consideration to relatives of deceased shown but it should be within limit of our means. The same discrimination should be used in floral offerings. Stacks of floral designs may show popularity. Flowers and carriages are expensive and they should not be indulged for the sake of feeling when one is impoverished by the expenditure."

It is interesting to note the different ways that people have in spending money. Few people spend alike. The easy young man, with a disregard for money, puts his thumb and forefinger into his vest pocket and brings out his change without a glance at it. He knows a quarter, a dime, and a nickel by touch. He receives his change with a quick glance and drops it into his coat pocket; there are others who handle it carefully and stow it safely away; there are those who part with it lingeringly, with an I-wish-I-could-go-with-you look. Then there is the young man with a snap pocket-book. A pocket-book denotes carefulness, and, generally, stinginess. When a man treats another and extracts his money from a purse, it always produces a singular feeling on the careless man. He does not enjoy the treat as he would if the expenditure had been made with a careless indifference. Just the fact that he carries a purse suggests that he likes his money and would like to keep it, but from obligation feels that he ought to treat. If there is any one who has never observed these characteristics of human nature, let him look about himself.

AMUSEMENTS.

WAIFS OF NEW YORK.—The attraction at Naylor's to-morrow evening is one that will test the capacity of the house—Katie Emmet, in her play, "The Waifs of New York." Miss Emmet is surrounded by an excellent company of well-known and capable people, including the favorite German comedian, George W. Thompson, Charles Patterson, I. J. Langtry, Edward Knott, W. F. Walcott, Miss Maud E. Peters, Nellie Maskell, Lottie Williams, and a bright little child actress who is only five years old, called La Petite Lillian. The scenery for the play is all new this season and is most elaborate, including views of "The Old Trinity Church by Moonlight," "Castle Garden at Sunset," "The Tombs," "The Police Court," "Exterior of the Tombs," "The Harlem Railroad Bridge"—scene showing two trains crossing the Harlem railroad bridge in opposite directions at night, and the grand fire scene at Five Points which is said to be the most thrilling and realistic fire scene ever seen upon any stage.

EMMA ABBOTT, IN ROSE OF CASTILE.

On Monday evening, October 21, the renowned Emma Abbott and her large double opera company will visit this city. The opera selected for Terre Haute is "Rose of Castile," by Balfé, one of the most brilliant in music and scene in her entire repertoire. It is new to the city, but an opera of great beauty in every way. The company is the best that Miss Abbott has ever gathered around her, and includes such artists as Lizzie Annandale, Myra Mirella, Madeline Montegroff, Prue, Broderick, Allen, Keedy Karl, Faust and Carl Marken, director. The chorus and orchestra are a feature of great pride to Miss Abbott, and both are by far the strongest ever known in English opera in America. The music-loving citizens of this city and vicinity should give Miss Abbott a royal reception. The advance sale of seats opens Thursday, October 17, at Button's.

CHICAGO EXPOSITION.

Until October 19th, the C. & E. I. R. will sell tickets, Terre Haute to Chicago and return at $7.15, for trains leaving Terre Haute 11:30 P. M., Wednesday of each week, and 5:15 A. M., and 10:45 A. M., Thursday of each week, good returning until Sunday following day of sale.
