THROUGH THE TELEPHONE.

Telephones test our courtesy and our conversation perhaps more than any other device of civilization. And they not only test us, but they tempt us. We are tempted to be rude to a stranger over the telephone in a way that we would not dream of in a face-to-face conversation with any one. The opening sentence over the phone is one of the most important in our lives. It is the first impression we make. It is the first step toward a friendship or an acquaintance. It is the first step toward a business transaction. It is the first step toward a marriage. It is the first step toward a life.

FROZE THE GRASSHOPPERS.

Story of Glacier Made of Insects Verified by Government Forester.

BILLINGS, Mont., Oct. 13.—Forest Supervisor J. C. Whitman and Fred Rixon, who planned to plant a flag on the summit of Granite peak, 12,950 feet high, the highest point in the Beartooth range of mountains, were compelled to return to this city without accomplishing their purpose.

Mr. Whitman, who is acting supervisor of the Beartooth national forest, has forwarded specimens to Washington confirming the "myth" of the grasshopper glacier.

"Actually," asserts the forester, "there is a belt of frozen grasshoppers running the entire length of the glacier at the head of West Rosebud, ten miles from Cooke City. The glacier is a mile long and from a distance it can be seen that the grasshopper belt extends the entire length of the ice field. How far into the glacier the mass of hoppers extends it was impossible to tell.

"The grasshoppers are not exactly a solid mass of the surface, but they lie so thickly that a person can not step without treading upon them. Insect heads, legs and a kind of black debris are scattered all over that part of the glacier. When the wind blows these fragments are scattered all over the mountain top. You can plainly see that the mass must extend some depth into the glacier."

Seven years ago a prospector first told the tale of the grasshopper glacier, but none would credit it. Excursions were made to the glacier in following years, but heavy snows buried the insects.

Mr. Whitman used a pick and dug into the mass where the insects were intact. "Those that exhibited in a bottle were unbroken. He believes that the grasshoppers were endeavoring to cross the range, which rises to an altitude of 11,000 feet, and were overcome. There are no live grasshoppers now anywhere near the mountain top.
