

NON-PARTISAN TICKET WITHDRAWS FROM RACE

Politics Is Thus Simplified Near Cayuga, Leaving Democrats Far in the Lead.

By Special Correspondent.
CAYUGA, Ind., Oct. 17.—The non-partisan township ticket, with Calvin P. Miller at the head of trustees, has withdrawn from the race, and local politics has been somewhat simplified, there being now but two tickets in the field, the democrats and republican. The withdrawal of the non-partisan ticket caused much surprise to local politicians, as the supporters of that movement have been leading a rather strenuous campaign and this turn in matters was unlooked for.

Normally, the democrats have a big majority in Eugene township, and it has been more than twenty years since the republicans have won out. Joseph Glickson is the democratic nominee, while John D. Todd is the standard bearer of the republican camp.

The Awakening of Peggy

LXXVIII.
IN WHICH WE LEARN FROM MR. CONDREY'S OWN LIPS WHAT HE THINKS OF LIFE.

WHEN two young people are getting acquainted, they generally follow a time-tried method of going into action. They take sounding of each other's interests to see what they have in common. It is the rule that when they have gone through this ritual they are ready for friendship, provided their views are not too divergent.

Peggy and Parker Condrey, on the evening when the latter called, of course had to compare ideas on Omar, and Kipling, and all the other formal stock favorites. Peggy didn't know much about any of them, but, like most of our girls, she had enough ideas trained at her command to answer the conversational necessities.

"Those fellows are all right," said Condrey in finally disposing of the old favorites, "but I think the best fun in life is in doing things. I haven't read many highbrow books, and don't care to. I haven't time. There's too much going on right around one."

"But don't you think everyone ought to read the best classic writings?" protested Peggy, "This from Peggy, who hadn't read half a dozen classics in her life."

"Oh, I suppose I'm open to attack," replied Condrey. "I generally start something when I talk that way. But, on the square, I don't believe half the people who disagree with me read anything more elevating than the popular magazines. I don't believe in pretending what I don't practice."

"Peggy couldn't think of anything to say to this."

"What interests me," pursued Condrey, "is performance. I like people who want something real, who know how to go after it, and who get what they believe is worth while. That's why I'm interested in the plans you've been telling me about. At first I wondered, after what I was told, whether you might not be a little too austere in your high purposes. Now I know I was misinformed about this."

Peggy smiled inwardly. The thought of her being austere in good works, so soon after her conversion at her father's hands, amused her. Mr. Condrey evidently didn't know her kiddy history or he might have been inclined to discount her sincerity a wee bit. Maybe his taking her for granted might strengthen her in her course.

"The trouble with people who are too deep in their purpose," Condrey was continuing, "is that they are apt to be bigoted. They can't enjoy themselves. I believe we ought to have a good time as we go along, and keep young. We ought to mix hard work and real play."

"But that's enough of this oracular vein. You'll think I'm a lecturer, broken in loose from the Chautauqua circuit. Let's have some music."

Peggy's later confession to her father was that she considered Mr. Condrey full of interesting possibilities.
