Americanism

LEONARD WOOD

I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!
—Patrick Henry: Speech before the Virginia convention March, 1775.

EVERY American schoolboy knows this speech of Patrick Henry. In recent years serious speakers have avoided it as a text and rarely have used it as a quotation. Why? Simply because it is so well known and has been repeated so many times in the years past for public platforms that the thought has been it is worn threadbare. There even have been those who have looked upon it as a bit of "spread-eaglesism" and therefore not to be used in what they call dignified discourse.

The men who look upon this utterance of Patrick Henry in this way lose sight of the spirit of the times and the immediate spirit of the occasion which induced its utterance. It was a ringing and a daring speech and it meant Americanism at a time when only the fearless were thinking of Americanism in all that the word implies.

Freedom, equality of men before the law, those inalienable rights of mankind, which the Declaration of Independence, only one year after Henry spoke in Virginia, made as plain as John Hancock's signature so that all men might read.

Patrick Henry in this speech said that he did not know what course others might take. There were then men who feared to follow the path which led to independence, and there were other men who did not believe that liberty with equality could be attained, or if attained could be maintained. The doubting ones drew lessons from the past and predicted like happenings in the future. America has given the answer to the doubters in this country.

There is but one course that men may take if they would insure the preservation of those institutions which were in Patrick Henry's mind when he demanded liberty and made death preferable if it were to be denied. Americans born here or born elsewhere have liberty in their hands to keep or to throw away. Americanism has but one object, the teaching of that kind of citizenship which holds liberty priceless.

ARMISTICE IN RUSSIA

Russo-Polish Truce Reached at Riga Conference.

Premier Dombski Says Agreement Was Reached on Polish Eleven Points Declaration—52,000 Prisoners Taken.

London, Oct. 7.—Soviet Russia and Finland have signed a treaty of peace at Dorpat, says a wireless dispatch from Moscow.

Riga, Oct. 7.—An argument for the signing of an armistice, preliminary to peace, not later than Oct. 8, was reached by M. Joffe and M. Dombski, heads of the Russian and Polish delegations, respectively.

M. Dombski said that the details of the agreement would be made public today. He said that the agreement was on the Polish 11 points declaration, made at the beginning of the Riga conference after M. Joffe's Moscow declaration.

The agreement was reported after an informal conference between Dombski and Joffe.

While it had not been expected so early it did not come altogether as a surprise, as reports had been in the air all day that an armistice would be signed within two or three days—by next Saturday at the latest.

After the conference broke up shortly after 7:30 o'clock, M. Joffe and M. Dombski returned to their respective hotels. The announcement of the armistice was made about an hour later.

The details of the agreement have not yet been announced.

The main commission had been working all day in a routine way on legal, financial and economic questions, when late in the afternoon Joffe and Dombski went quietly into session with their secretaries and got together on the main questions in dispute between Poland and the Bolsheviks.

The protocol was quickly drawn up and the signing of it by both chairmen followed immediately.

The Polish official communication received by the peace delegates says that during the last week the Poles have taken 52,000 prisoners, 180 guns, 1,100 machine guns, seven armored trains, 28 locomotives and much other material.

Attaches of the Polish general staff here say that the Poles now occupy the major part of the old German trench system on the Baranovitch line, notably in the Lida sector and in the direction of Minsk, which they insist, however, is not their objective.
