sudden loss of one-half of his life's savings, Cunningham, who is a retired farmer living at 1523 Park avenue sought the police. He was the victim of two smooth confidence men, who disappeared like a puff of smoke. All they left behind was a box supposed to contain $6,000, but which in reality held a few timetables and the "Bunkoed by gosh" epistle, written with a blue lead pencil and signed "Bunko Bill."

"Bill" wrote as follows:

"I am not a banker, but only looking for old fools like you. By the time you are looking for me I will be in Canada looking for another old fool like you. So if you don't want to be laughed at don't tell anybody, for they can't do you any good. I got your money and am going to keep it. So if you don't tell no one we won't."

Mr. Cunningham thought he was getting in on a good thing in the nature of a Carnegie reward. Briefly, his loss came through a newly found "friend" who scraped his acquaintance in front of the Cunningham home. The "friend" took Cunningham to a room at 149 West Vermont Avenue and convinced him then and there that he had drawn a $3,000 prize from Andrew Carnegie.

Required to Post $3,000.

The "friend's" confederate conducted the "drawing," but before surrendering the $3,000 said Mr. Carnegie required all persons who received his money to put up a like amount. Cunningham was appealed to by the "friend" to furnish the $3,000 with which to detach the $3,000 prize. He was to share in the prize. He obtained the money at the Indiana National Bank and the "prize" with its equivalent was placed in a tin cash box. The "friend" having business to transact then, gave Cunningham the box, saying he would stop at the Cunningham home on his way to lunch at noon and they would divide the "prize" and Cunningham would take back his own $3,000 in addition. When lunch time passed and the "friend" was still missing, Cunningham opened the box—and the blow fell.

"Bunko Bill" first introduced himself to Cunningham as a real estate man. The aged farmer was sweeping off a walk in front of his home when the genial stranger inquired about certain property in the neighborhood. He had a pleasing manner and they engaged in a conversation. The stranger said he resided a few blocks farther north on Park avenue.

The "real estate" man passed Cunningham's name several times and on each occasion the two men became better acquainted. Several days ago "Bill" informed Cunningham of good fortune in a "Carnegie drawing."

"I took a little chance and obtained two books on the life of Andrew Carnegie," Bill explained. "I only need one and will make you a present of the other. Some day when I'm driving by we'll go down and get it," he added.

Drove to City Library.

The man drove up for Cunningham yesterday morning and they went down to get the book. They first went to the City Library, but after making supposed inquiry the swindler came out of the building to inform the retired farmer that the books had been taken to a friend's room on West Vermont street.

When they arrived, at the room they found "Bunko Bill's" partner, a man about 60 years of age. In reply to an inquiry about the books the partner said "You also got $5 along with those books," and paid him the money. Cunningham's supposed friend was so pleased he took another chance. A few white cards—face down—lay on the table. He picked up one—the partner looked at a chart and replied: "Why you get $10 more." "Bill" drew again and was astounded when informed that $3,000 was the prize.

The partner started to pay the $3,000 when he said. "Let's see, you know Andrew Carnegie always requires the persons who get his money to put up an equal amount. Show me your money before I pay you."

The Carnegie books were forgotten in the excitement of the $3,000 prize. Bill told Cunningham the largest share of the prize would be his if he would only get him the $3,000 to cover the prize. Mr. Cunningham was induced to borrow the amount at the Indiana National Bank, where he was known as a fairly well-to-do customer. He put up $3,000 in mortgages as security and allowed the bank to hold $15 as interest on the thirty day loan.

Put $6,000 in a Box.

Cunningham, with the large amount of bills, stepped into the buggy and the stranger drove him back to the West Vermont Street boarding house. The partner was somewhat surprised—in actions—but counted out $3,000. Then the $6,000 was put in a tin cash box and Cunningham thought "Bunko Bill" was giving him the same box, when he said: "Now I have to drive down here a few squares on a little business matter. You take the money home and I'll stop for my share as I go out for lunch."

Carrying the box which he believed contained the money under his arm the happy man wended his way home. The stranger did not call for his share and Cunningham became suspicious. He unlocked the box and the note headed "Bunkoed, by Gosh," with eight time-tables of various railroads, greeted his eyes. Capt. Gray was immediately notified.

Mrs. Lewis Short who rented the men a sitting room on Vermont Street when they insisted on being downstairs and informed her they would only use it from 8 o'clock until 11 o'clock each morning, was badly deceived in the men. They made arrangements for the room Thursday afternoon, and yesterday morning paid $1 for the day's use. The men swindled only the one victim before disappearing. Two blotters, one of which bore an advertisement of a Grand Rapids, Mich., firm and a piece of wrapping paper remained in their "workroom."

Cunningham, who formerly resided on a farm twelve miles north of Greencastle, came to Indianapolis when he retired seven years ago. He resides with his two daughters, the Misses Margaret and Belle. His son, Dr. John M. Cunningham, resides at 2315 North Meridian Street—Indianapolis Star.

DIED IN BARNYARD

Joseph Elrod, Well Known to Many Putnam County People, Dropped Dead This Morning, Supposedly of Heart Disease.

Mr. Joseph Elrod, a well known citizen, who resided near Coatesville, just east of the Putnam County line, went to the barn early this morning, to look after his stock. Not returning to the house as soon as expected, search was made for him and he was found prone upon the ground, with life extinct.

His death is supposed to have resulted from heart disease.

Mr. Elrod was about 70 years of age and his sudden demise is mourned by a large circle of relatives and friends.

CYCLONE STRUCK HORSES

Delayed Reports of the Ravages of Last Tuesday's Storm in Northeast Putnam—Same Storm in Grant County.

L. T. Hurst gave to the Herald this morning the story of the cyclone of last Tuesday after it left the Dimler place. Mr. Hurst reports that the storm next struck the Marion Wright place, doing some damage, and next the farm of L. T. Hurst. Here it first struck an open field where three two-year old horses were feeding. It blew these horses across the field, rolling and pushing them, as is evidenced by the marks on the ground. One was finally blown over a small embankment and its legs broken. The other two escaped, but are so sore and lame after their experience as scarcely to be able to walk.

The storm at this point was not more than forty to sixty feet wide. It next struck a piece of heavy timber, tore down some twenty-five trees and then abruptly lifted and changed its course, going further to the east than the line it had heretofore followed. It did not drop again till near Winchester, and then raised to descend a second time in Grant County.

Two of the pleasing things in being the most popular lady in Greencastle; one is the satisfaction of knowing that you get more votes than any other lady; the other, that of getting the Arabian net waist.

THE TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

Second Day's Session Proves Interesting But the Attendance Falls Off—Speed Lecture Friday Night Was Excellent.

INSTRUCTORS CONTINUE TO WORK

The second day of the Putnam County Teacher's Institute opened at 9:30 this morning. After the devotional exercises Mrs. Olcott took up the work in primary that was found so interesting and helpful on Friday. She discussed first, "Hand Work and the Study Program." She showed how it was possible to give the children something to do at their seats while they were too small to really study, and while, as in country schools, they must spend some time each day at their seats without the attention of the teacher.

After a short intermission Prof. Moran spoke on "English Government." Prof. Moran is a ready and thoughtful speaker, and his morning talk was followed with close attention.

After music Mrs. Olcott gave her second talk of the morning on "Nature Study Stories." She gave the theory of the work and illustrated with several stories charmingly told.

The final moments of the session were given over to the election of officers and reports of committees. The officers elected for the coming year were Miss Della Miller, president; R. R. Sinclair, vice-president; Miss Etta Adams, secretary. All these were charter members of the association. Mr. Oscar Thomas was made treasurer. This closed one of the most successful of the meetings of the Putnam County Teachers' Association.

The lecture given Friday night by James Speed on the "Blue Heron" was largely attended and well received. Mr. Speed has rare power of observation and of imparting the results of that observation. His pictures were excellent.

THE NEED OF THE TIME

In the Thanksgiving sermon preached at the College Avenue Church last Thursday, some things were said which will bear a little of our Sunday thought and meditation. It is well to sit down occasionally and inquire "where we are at." The speaker, the Rev. Rudy, upon that occasion used the following language:

Dear Friends: I am quite convinced that at the present time the deepest and most vital need of Christian people is to magnify the elements and conditions of subjective rather than objective growth. The mind of the nation seems to be more and more objective and materialistic. It seems almost impossible for the American people of late years to focus thought upon the center and source of their power. The American mind seems to be more and more exercising itself with the question of "world power" and world influence. We seem to be worried lest some footing that we have gained will be lost; lest we fail in the expedients and the resources which will assure our maintaining our present place. A young Southerner, Captain Hobson, has come up and down the country for several years sounding the warning of the "yellow peril." And the mind of the nation seems ready to heed the warning. This could be illustrated by the tendency toward enormous expenditures and appropriations for army and navy enlargement. Twelve years ago, at the close of the second Cleveland administration, we had about 30 1/2 millions appropriated for the navy. Under the last of the Roosevelt administration we have 122 1/2 millions; for the army under Cleveland we have nearly 23 1/2 millions, but under Roosevelt, 12 years later, we have nearly 95 1/2 millions. Of course we live in a growing, expanding, enlarging country. All very true, but it seems that we are developing the national mind which says "We can care for ourselves and we are going to do it." We have the resources in men and money and we are going to use them. In the early history of the country the fiery orator reminded his countrymen that the battle is not to the strong alone, but our stump orator today is intolerant of every thing except strength, and material strength, too. The man who has most completely captured the American imagination today is a hunter of big game, a rough-rider and one who is cartooned the world over as having great big teeth in his mouth and a great big stick in his hand. The truth is, friends, we are beginning to bend the knee in the worship of, if not falling prostrate before a number of American gods, the god of profit, the god of power, the god of success, the god of outward achievement. I fear we can get up more enthusiasm in our average college over a battle between feet than over a battle between heads. If religious zeal should ever get to making people behave themselves like this sort of animal enthusiasm parents, professors and everybody would declare that an epidemic of insanity was prevailing. Yet the Apostle Paul dared to say, "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the spirit." "It is good to be zealously affected in a good thing." That was a great stroke which Pres. Eliot of Harvard made when he reminded our great President, and he is a great man, that to pull in a boat race was a small thing as compared with honor and honesty. All that you need to do is to keep your eyes and ears and heart open and you will be able to realize that we are fast falling in with the sentiment that God is "on the side of the heaviest battalions." "That the race is to the swift," and "the battle to the strong." Of course we believe in the beautiful tradition that God guided our forefathers in the founding and settling of this wonderful country. We can't think it otherwise than that God had a great, sublime, definite purpose in opening up this, the seat of the mightiest of earth's empires, but while we all feel that the God of our fathers gave them their start we now can stand alone. Our nation in its early history felt the power that came from sense of dependence upon God. It was the cold, philosophic Benjamin Franklin who arose and said to the Constitutional Convention of 1787: "In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayer in this room for the divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace upon the means of establishing our future national felicity. I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proof I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?"

THE STRAW VOTE FOR KERN

Ballots Thus Far Received in the Vote for United States Senator Shows The Sentiment Still Strong For the Indianapolis Man.

In the Herald's voting contest for United States Senator the vote thus far cast is almost unanimous for Kern. Thus far 296 ballots have been sent to the Herald office. Of these the count shows as follows:

John W. Kern ..... 199
B. F. Shively ..... 3
J. W. Lamb ..... 4
Total ..... 206

This shows the opinion almost unanimous for John Kern so far as the Democrats of Putnam County are concerned.

Theodore Boes today purchased through the Peck Agency the Dan Conner house on Hanna Street, for the sum of $2,000.

EXPECT BOY WILL RECOVER

The announcement published in the Times Wednesday evening to the effect that Dr. Pell of Carbondale had been called into a puzzling case that so greatly resembled hydrophobia he feared it would so prove to be, caused a great deal of interest among the medical fraternity of this city and county.

Dr. Pell made an engagement to meet several doctors at the home of the patient yesterday, but most of them were unable to be there. The patient is the 13-year old son of Stephen West, residing at Fairview, just north of this city. On August 30 young West was bitten by a dog. Soon after the hydrophobia scare developed in Terre Haute, and at precisely the required time the boy began exhibiting symptoms of hydrophobia. Dr. Pell was called in and expressed the fear that it was an attack of that disease. However, when he called on the boy this morning he found a decided improvement, which could not occur in the genuine disease, and he is satisfied it was simply a case of pseudo rabies. The spasms of the boy have almost ceased, his nervousness is better and he can swallow much better than he did. He will quickly recover.

Young West was greatly impressed with the hydrophobia scare at Terre Haute and read every line about the trouble in the newspapers. He expressed the fear that, as he had been bitten by a dog, that he would have hydrophobia. He was so convinced of this that when the time for the disease to appear rolled around he actually began to manifest symptoms of hydrophobia. It is a remarkable case and the first of the kind ever reported in this section of the state.—Brazil Times.

An application by the Vandalla Coal Company for an order restraining eighteen miners, who were injured by an explosion in the Rosebud coal mine, near Terre Haute, from prosecuting their respective suits for damages, until the pending appeal in a suit brought by the coal company to determine all the controversies at once is determined, was denied by the Appellate Court. The company asserted that some of the cases were likely to be called for trial at an early date, and it was threatened with the loss of all benefit from its appeal. The Appellate Court, however, advanced the appeal for immediate consideration and decision.

One of the cases was called this morning but Attorney Barrett being sick, the case was continued.

Sunday Night Subject.

"The Christian's Attitude Towards Faith Healing" is the subject of the second sermon in the series on "Faith Healing, Mind Cure and Christian Science" and kindred themes which Dr. Hoagland is discussing in College Avenue church. These questions are much in the public thought and it is believed that an earnest practical discussion of them will do good. The interest of the people is evident and the pastor invites them to be present.

Poor Air and Poor Living.

When Jim Bridger, the one time famous scout of the plains, grew old he thought he would like to retire from the somewhat arduous life of a plainsman and settle down to the ease of "the east," which to him meant Missouri. So he used his best endeavor to find a competent man to fill his place and went back to Missouri.

A year or two passed, and one day Captain Russell, the commandant of the post which Bridger had left, was surprised to see the old scout leave in sight. When he came in the captain asked:

"Well, Bridger, what brings you back here?"

"Captain," said Bridger, "I want to go back to scouting again."

"Indeed? Why, I thought you had settled down in the east for the rest of your life?"

"Well, cap'n, I'll tell you how it is. I went back to old Missouri, and if you'll believe it they've got a railroad station within ten miles of the old place—yes, sir, a railroad station! And, what's more, they've got a ranch now in every four miles. I tell you what, cap'n, the air ain't pure down there no more!"

"Is that possible? But I thought you'd like the good things to eat they have down there. You like good things to eat, I remember."

"Good things to eat! Why, cap'n, I didn't have a briled beaver tail the whole time I was there!"

The First Cookbook.

To the Romans belong the honor of having produced the first European cookery book, and, though the authorship is uncertain, it is generally attributed to Caelius Apicius, who lived under Trajan, 114 A. D. Here are two recipes from this ancient collection:

"First, for a sauce to be eaten with boiled fowl, put the following ingredients into a mortar: Aniseed, dried mint and lazer root. Cover them with vinegar, add dates and pour in liquamen (a distilled liquor made from large fish which were salted and allowed to turn putrid in the sun), oil and a small quantity of mustard seeds. Reduce all to a proper thickness with sweet wine warmed, and then pour this same over your chicken, which should previously be boiled in aniseed water."

The second recipe shows the same queer mixture of ingredients: "Take a wheelbarrow of rose leaves and pound in a mortar; add to it brains of two pigs and two thrushes boiled and mixed with the chopped up yoke of egg, oil, vinegar, pepper and wine. Mix and pour these together and stew them steadily and slowly till the perfume is developed."—Chambers' Journal.

What the Greatest Trust Company in Indiana is Doing for the Farmers

The Indiana Trust Co. is the oldest and largest Trust Co.-Savings Bank in the state. It has a capital of $1,250,000, resources of over $3,000,000, and is the Repository of the State and County Funds. This big strong bank is the great central banking house of Indiana farmers. So extensive is its business with country customers that it maintains a

Farmers' Banking Department

which gives to farmers throughout the state the same banking privileges enjoyed by manufacturers and merchants. The secret of its great success is a simple plan of BANKING BY MAIL. This plan makes it easy for farmers to deposit or draw out money without leaving home. The Indiana Trust Co. has 35 interest on time deposits or savings—The Safe Rate. If you have money lying idle, you are losing interest money every day. The experiences of some of the bank's customers is interesting.

Interest Would Have Clothed Two for Three Years

One farmer, in making a $2,000 deposit, said: "This $2,000 has been lying idle for THREE YEARS. I'm mighty sorry I didn't deposit it here long ago, as it would have earned $600 per year—or $1800. It would have clothed my wife and I for three winters!"

Interest Would Have Paid for Handsome Span of Horses

Another farmer, who deposited $4,000, said: "This money has been lying idle for three years. I regret that my attention was not called to your institution sooner. No wonder—in fact that three years the $4,000 would have earned $960, which would have purchased a handsome span of horses!"

An Education in Thrift

The Indiana Trust Co. encourages young folks on farms to save money. One dollar is enough to start an account. Money saved is money earned—and when small sums are deposited instead of being spent foolishly, they really earn 100 per cent.

Few people realize that $5.00 a month (10 cents a day), with interest at 3%, amounts to $33.77 in 3 years, or $99.44 (practically $100) in 10 years. Put your savings, large or small, in the Indiana Trust Co. and see them GROW!

A Change of Season.

(Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.)

When Miss Jeannette Perkins went to the country for a couple of months in summer it was for the purpose of relaxation. The winter social season with Miss Perkins was her "busy day."

Born in the swim, with no expectation of a dowry, it was her business to marry an establishment. None of the young men she had met during the winter—that she could get—filled the measure of her requirements. Some were stupid, some dissipated, some puffed with vanity and none of them quite rich enough. Miss Perkins' social position required as a minimum $10,000 a year, and it was her ambition to land three or four times that amount.

Tired of the social functions which she had constantly felt obliged to attend for a matrimonial purpose, when July came she resolved to go to some middle class resort where she would throw off the artificial and be refreshed by the natural. But even this was a part of her general plan, for she felt that some real love-making would give zest to her abilities as a charmer when engaged in hunting down a millionaire.

Miss Perkins received a heart freshening that she had not bargained for. One Howard Dangler, a recent graduate of a school for civil engineers, talked so enthusiastically of the life work before him and showed so plainly that his career would be the better for her wifely encouragement and affection that he quite flustered her. Not that she had any idea of seriously listening to his bubbling chat—not she—she had no use for love in a cottage and the care of children while her husband would be absent—often for long terms—in various parts of the world fighting his way in his profession.

But when, the season being over, they separated on a steamboat landing, the lovelight in Miss Perkins' eyes was not all assumed.

But this is a world of change.

It is December, Miss Perkins is handed a card on which is engraved the name of Howard Dangler. A faint change of color comes over her face, followed by indications of resolution. She goes to the drawing room, entering with a cold dignity. It is not July, but December, and Miss Perkins would not be out of season. She extends her hand to her visitor as a queen would extend hers to a subject who has carried her train over a ditch that he may receive his reward.

"How do you do, Mr. Dangler? How good of you to look me up! You are the only one of my summer acquaintances that I have met again."

The words "summer acquaintances" are spoken in an unmistakable tone.

"I have not been to your city before since I met you," stammers Mr. Dangler, "or I would have." Then, seeing that he is making matters worse, he stops and reddens.

Miss Perkins does not help him. Indeed, she sits mute, waiting for him to untangle himself. He goes off into something about "that delightful season," checks himself and, with a touch of melancholy, speaks of the "formal winter," then comes again to a stop. This time Miss Perkins condescends to make a remark.

"Do you remain for some time in the city?"

The words conveyed the idea that she would be willing he should leave by the next train.

By this time Mr. Dangler was beginning to recover himself. When he spoke again it was in a conventional tone, with which he seemed to be quite as familiar as Miss Perkins.

"I shall be here all winter," he said. "But I fear I shall see little of you in society, for I shall be very busy. My aunt, Mrs. Walter Delano, and other relatives and friends are urging me to accept invitations, but—"

"Mrs. Delano?" exclaimed Miss Perkins. "Your aunt?"

"I shall be engaged financing the A. L. and B. railroad, which we are going to build to connect two other roads of our system."

"But Mrs. Delano! I know her very well," again interrupted Miss Perkins. "She is the leader of our set."

"The young man pushed on. 'It will require some twenty millions to—'"

"But I thought you told me you were a civil engineer?"

"I am. My father thought a knowledge of engineering the best equipment for my life work. He is manager of the system and is beginning to throw some of his smaller responsibilities on to my shoulders. This little matter of twenty millions—"

"Are you the son of Edgar T. Dangler, the railroad king?"

"Yes, and my father sets more store by me than most fathers do by their sons, for he has only me to carry on his great work after his death. But pardon me, I'm sure I have kept you altogether too long for a mere summer acquaintance."

During these developments the beat of Miss Perkins' heart had gone down to something like forty to the minute. She saw without a possibility of even a clutch. Though Mr. Dangler spoke in a quiet tone, he gave no sign that Miss Perkins could even be to him more than a summer acquaintance. Coldly, but courteously, he left her.

Miss Perkins kept her room for three days and when she reappeared looked as if she had been keel hauled. She had no heart for her winter campaign, and it was a failure. She met Mr. Dangler several times in company during the season, and on one occasion he was presented to her. He did not refer to ever having met her before.

A STOWAWAY.

(Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.)

We were but a day out from Bremen when a seaman stepped up to me and, saluting, said, "Mr. Warren, one of the men on the lower deck heard a cough among the freight and after a search for stowaways pulled out a girl."

"A girl?" I exclaimed, surprised.

"Yes, sir, a girl."

I directed the stowaway to look her over with a view to determining how much work she could stand and what kind of work to give her, for our orders were to work stowaways so hard as to render that method of gaining free transportation undesirable. The girl came up frightened, but after a glance at the ocean, seeing that we were well away from land, a look of triumph crossed her features. Knowing by my uniform that I was an officer, she stood demurely before me, with her eyes on the deck. She was very fair—indeed, so fair that I knew she came from my native north.

"What have you done this for?" I asked her. "Don't you know that we work stowaways harder than those who hire themselves to us honestly?"

She did not reply. Only a faint flush passed over her face. The longer I looked at her the more her delicate beauty grew upon me. Her features, especially her mouth, could not have been more exquisite if they had been chiseled by an artist, and though her clothes were soiled and torn, she had not been long enough in the hold to show the effects usual to stowaways. There was something piteous about the slender, shrinking figure that deterred me from visiting the usual hardships due to such offenders.

"What's your name?" I asked.

"Gretchen."

"Well, Gretchen, you have been a very foolish girl. You'll be worked hard, and if you can't show that you can support yourself when you get to New York you will be sent back."

At that moment the captain came along, and, taking in the situation, relieved me of all responsibility. He was a terror to stowaways and sent the girl away to be worked day and night. I shuddered, for I knew the delicate frame before me could scarcely stand the ordeal. Any word of protest from me would only result in a heavier strain for the girl.

We had stormy weather all the way over. Gretchen, though seafish, was forced to continue at her duties. Every moment of the day and much of the night she was either at work in the galley under the head cook or in the cabins under the stewardess, and both were ordered to make her life miserable. The weather kept us all busy, and I saw nothing of her till we reached New York. Then on the day of our arrival I saw—well, it was what remained of the poor girl. In five days her beauty had departed. Her cheeks were sunken and had taken on a bluish white tint. Her eyes were a hunted look; her arms were bones covered only with a bloodless skin. She was tottering to the gangway to go ashore with the immigrants. She carried no bags or bundles like the rest—indeed, she would not have been able to carry them if she had possessed them.

I was off duty and, going up to her, took her arm and steadied her down the gangway. I went with her into the room where the disembarked immigrants assembled for examination. Suddenly she gave a cry and, breaking away from me, ran toward a young man standing with his hands in his pockets watching the crowd come into the room.

"Hans," she called, "I am here!"

The young man drew back from this skeleton of a girl in filthy rags and with unkempt hair.

"I am Gretchen. Oh, Hans, don't you know me?"

Hans stared at her curiously. Gradually he showed signs of recognizing her. She was his betrothed and had come as a stowaway to marry him. He knew of her coming and was there to meet her. But the sight of her after her torture was too much for him. Without a word he turned and left the place.

Gretchen fell fainting into my arms. She was deported in the same ship in which she had come over, but she did not work her passage. The government attended to that.

One night while I was on duty I saw a woman's figure come up a companionway and make a dash for the gunwale. She was half over when I caught her and dragged her back. She was Gretchen.

I placed her in a deck chair and questioned her. I learned that she had lived in the German province from which I had come. I secured a promise that she would make no further attempt on her life. I also got some better clothes for her and a berth in the second cabin. On the day we reached Hamburg I was leaning over the rail of the bridge, looking down at some second class passengers on their deck watching for land. Suddenly my eyes met those of Gretchen. Decently dressed, much of the color back in her cheeks, the look of suffering faded from her eyes, she was again something of the beauty I had met as a stowaway. For the first time since that meeting she smiled at me.

My life is different now from what it was before this episode. Then when ashore I grew tired of illness and myself and was glad to get back to sea. Now I have a cottage near Hamburg and when coming into port can see a figure standing before it throwing me kisses. It is Gretchen, my wife, and the mother of my children.

DID NOT GET THE LICENSE

Applicant Finds That the Paper Issued by the State Gives No Privileges and Denounces the Whole Law.

There was wrath and profanity in the clerk's office this morning when the true inwardness of the hunter's license became apparent to a would-be Nimrod. The man had come to the office to take out a license. Before giving up his dollar he made inquiry as to what rights the paper conferred. He was informed that it gave no rights at all. That after having the license the man could not hunt without the written consent of the man on whose land he wished to shoot. Then the explosion came.

As a matter of fact there is a great deal of dissatisfaction with the resident license. It is of no value except to create a fund to hire game wardens. It protects no game. It leaves the power where it belongs, in the hands of the man who owns the land that must be hunted over. The theory that the state owns the wild game is becoming weaker and weaker. In practice the game belongs to the man on whose farm it grows, whose grain feeds it. He has the right to say whether it shall be hunted, the right to declare whether hunters shall shoot upon his land. The license is without value. It creates a fund to pay police holders, most of whom are not land owners and are pseudo-sportsmen, with their own desires to kill. It is believed that quail and squirrel should be protected. Neither should be killed. But only the farmers are interested. They aid him, are on his land. He should have the say in the matter. If he wishes to hunt his own ground he ought not to be taxed to support a warden.

MEAD-PROCTOR

The marriage of Arnold Mead to Miss Ona Proctor was solemnized at 2:30 p. m. Wednesday, November 25 at the home of Rev. Brown, east of Greencastle. The bride wore a navy blue tailored suit with hat and gloves to match, while the groom wore the conventional black.

The bride is a most estimable young lady, the daughter of William Proctor of Indianapolis. She formerly resided with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Siddons of Greencastle. The groom is a prosperous young man of Indianapolis. They will make their future home in Indianapolis, where they will have the best wishes of all.

TAKE SCHOOLS OUT OF POLITICS

State Superintendent Believes Education is Injured by Political Situation in Many Cities and Counties.

Fassett A. Cotton, state superintendent of public instruction, in his November bulletin to the teachers of the state issued recently, discusses the organization and operation of Indiana's school system. In treating of the strength and weakness of the system Mr. Cotton says that the schools of Indiana are still suffering from the blight of partisan politics. He says that the constant progress of the schools of a county depends upon the "energy, intelligence and sanity of the county superintendent." Mr. Cotton says further that the schools of Indiana appear to suffer most from politics as encountered in the township, cities and towns. Mr. Cotton asserts that the hope of education in Indiana lies in a divorce from politics.

As the system's greatest strength Mr. Cotton points to its unity of purpose. He also commends it for encouraging ability in teachers, for leaving individualism unhampered and the right of initiative unquestioned. In so far as it merely seeks to place its teachers in the treadmill of mere mechanical routine, Mr. Cotton says, the system is to be condemned.

Character Counts No Substitutes Sold

In choosing a drug store, character counts for everything, and price counts for nothing—where health and safety are concerned. We adhere strictly to the principle that quality is all that counts in medicine. Of course, when it comes to patent medicine, toilet articles, etc., the price is well known, and on those things our store has enjoyed a reputation for getting these articles or its customers at a material saving from the price elsewhere.

Our stocks are complete, and we never offer a customer some unknown concoction at a cost rate for a well advertised article, which he has confidence in. We are proud of our reputation in the drug business—pride with reason—and, positively assured that we can well please you, we invite you to try us, if you do not know, and continue as our friend if you now are.
