OPTION FORCES ARE HAPPY ENGINEERS TO SUBMIT BIDS

Putnam County Temperance Workers Hear the Returns From Lawrence and Wabash Counties and Smile Broadly.

Chicago and Pittsburg Experts Look Over the Ground and Will Make Bids for Furnishing Preliminary Survey and Plans.

WORK IS BEING PUSHED HERE 1 SYSTEM OR 3 IS THE QUESTION

Work of securing signatures to the petition calling for an election under the county local option law was pushed steadily forward today. The workers in Putnam County were early apprised of the victories won by the "drys" in Lawrence and Wabash Counties. Many of the local temperance workers expressed themselves as sure of the result in the two counties before the returns, though in most instances the size of the majority in Lawrence County was a surprise.

Workers in the out-townships report that the securing of signatures is an easy matter. Russell township reports that eight out of ten men approached thus far are signing the petition, and declaring their intention to vote dry. Here and there a man is met who believes the call for the election is too early, or objects to the cost, but in general all these objections are swallowed up in a desire to see Putnam vote dry.

As yet those opposed to the election have taken no active part in the campaign, and it is possible that no fight will be made, at least until after the petition is in. There are men who still believe that the county will vote wet, but the number is diminishing rapidly.

BROTHERS' ASSAILANT SENTENCED

James Scott, a Horse Trader, Who Attacked Former Putnam County Man Gets Sentence to Prison.

After being out less than ten minutes, the jury in the Montgomery Circuit Court that heard the evidence against James Scott, a horse trader, who was charged with assault and battery with intent to kill, returned a verdict of guilty Monday afternoon. Scott was sentenced by Judge West to serve a term of from two to fourteen years in the penitentiary. Scott stabbed Policeman Brothers, of Crawfordsville, a few weeks ago, in the stomach while resisting arrest.

Scott has a prison record, and this will be his fifth term in the penitentiary. In addition he has served three years in the Plainfield school for incorrigibility. He was sent to Plainfield from Huntington, Ind., under what is presumed to be his right name, Allen Van Dyne. The stabbing of policeman Brothers took place November 4. Three weeks ago Scott made a bold attempt to break jail by sawing a lock in two. He will be taken to Michigan City at once by Sheriff Lawrence.

The funeral services were on Sunday, at St. Paul.

There will be a called meeting of Greencastle Chapter, No. 255, O. E. S., December 30, at 8 p. m. Installation of officers.

Gertrude Hammond, Secy.

Engineer Shields of Chicago and Wetherill of Pittsburg were in Greencastle Tuesday taking a look at the conditions preparatory to making bids for furnishing the preliminary survey and plans for our sewer system. Mr. Wetherill went over the ground with Engineer Denny, and Engineer Shields with Mr. Graham. Both men left Greencastle this morning, and it is understood that both will submit figures for which they will undertake the preliminary survey.

The chief question with Wetherill was whether one or three systems would be necessary. He stated that it would be impossible to make a decision from so short an acquaintance with the situation. Both men were very reticent and did little talking.

Later he will return to Greencastle and make right anything left unsettled at this time. Dr. Moore is very weak and physically in a serious condition.

The A B C and X Y Z of ADVERTISING

A SERIES OF TEN TALKS ON ADVERTISING No. 4
written by Seymour Eaton of Philadelphia

Don't let newspaper circulation fool you. The newspaper which has the least power to sell goods usually makes the loudest shout about circulation.

Don't skip around from one newspaper to another. Success in advertising comes from hammering away at the same crowd.

Pick out the newspaper which has the kind of readers you want for customers and then stick. When you get things going keep your head. A lineup of canvassers from competitive newspapers will call on you immediately and show you by a process of arithmetic, or it may be of geography, that they can give you twice the circulation at half the price; that whoever advised you didn't know what he was talking about; that if the paper your advertisement is in actually pays you their newspapers will certainly make you a millionaire.

They are all nice fellows and put up good lunches and you like to meet them. Each will tell you that your advertisement is the prettiest thing he ever saw and that your store is a perfect gem. But don't. You can't afford it; at least not unless you have sufficient advertising appropriation to keep copy in all the newspapers continuously.

An eight-inch advertisement in one newspaper will bring much bigger results than a two-inch advertisement in four newspapers.

If you advertise your store to a hundred and fifty thousand people you can safely bank on the fact that in due time everybody will hear about you. People have a way of passing along good news.

The fact that your advertisement appears continuously in a reputable newspaper stimulates public confidence. Your shop advances step by step in the estimation of tens of thousands of people who may be months getting around to make their first purchase.

You can talk to a hundred and fifty thousand people any day of the week through a metropolitan newspaper and make your talk as personal as you wish. You need not employ an interpreter or use a megaphone. Simply talk. That's all. Be sincere about it. Let your words ring true. The people will listen. They like it.

Spend thousands a year on rent and electric light and experienced salesmen and then squeeze out a niggardly hundred or two on advertising—on telling the people that you have the store and the goods and the salesmen, all hanging around waiting. A retail shop that spends $5,000 a year on rent ought at the very lowest estimate spend $10,000 a year on advertising.

Your advertising is not a thing apart from your enterprise. It is your enterprise; a contagion which you yourself create and which, if thoroughly spread, is as enduring as the everlasting hills.

PURDUE'S SHORT COURSE

Eight Weeks Will be Spent in the Study of Phases of Animal Husbandry.

JOHN McCABE, JR., FROM PUTNAM

The Animal Husbandry Department of the Purdue School of Agriculture is making every preparation for another successful winter's short course.

The course of eight weeks offered by this department from January 18 to March 12 includes the following subjects: The judging of beef cattle, with lectures on breeding, feeding and management; judging light and heavy horses with a consideration of the principles involved in their production and care; feeding, care and management of hogs, with extensive practice in judging both market and breeding classes; judging sheep and flock management; eight lectures on the principles concerned in the practical breeding of livestock; the chemistry of feeds; the construction of farm buildings; forage crops and pastures; the common diseases of farm animals with their care and treatment; unsoundness of the horse; and lectures on livestock sanitation.

These courses are especially designed to meet the demands of the young farmer whose time and means do not permit of more thorough preparation. The work is practical in nature, about one half the entire time of the student being devoted to laboratory or practice work. A few excursions to nearby stock farms and breeding establishments, at times convenient for the students outside the regular classes.

The keen interest and enthusiasm displayed by students taking these courses is strong endorsement of their practical value. Indications at present point to a larger attendance this year than ever before. Those interested should send for catalogue of the winter courses in agriculture.

containing description of courses, estimation of expenses, information about free scholarships available in each county, etc. Apply to J. H. Skinner, Dean of the School of Agriculture, Lafayette, Ind. A scholarship is given to each county and this year Putnam will send John McCabe, Jr., of Clinton Township.

ROLLER PRIZE FIGHTS NOW

Former DePauw Football Star and Wrestler Has Posted $1,000 to Bind Match With Winner of the Kaufmann-Barry Bout—Will be Ready to Fight March 1.

GO IS BILLED FOR LOS ANGELES

Seattle, Wash.—Dr. B. F. Roller put up $1,000 today with a local newspaper as a side bet for a match with the winner of the Kaufmann-Barry fight, which is billed for Los Angeles next Wednesday night. Roller says he would be ready to fight about March 1.

When he received word from Los Angeles that $1,000 has been put in the hands of Jim Jeffries to cover his deposit he will consider the match as good as made. Roller is a prominent wrestler who was recently defeated by Champion Frank Gotch.

The Jeffries Athletic Club of Los Angeles has made definite arrangements to stage a heavy-weight boxing match between the winner of the Kaufmann-Barry fight Wednesday night and Dr. B. F. Roller, the Seattle athlete. The bout, which will be staged March 1, will be for twenty-five rounds, and the boxers will receive 50 per cent. of the receipts, to be split 75 per cent. to the winner and 25 to the loser. The match was settled when Dr. Roller deposited $1,000. The money is a forfeit for non-appearance, and will go as a side bet. Both Kaufmann and Barry have agreed to the match, and the winner will deposit his forfeit within a few days after the fight.

Roller is the former DePauw football star.

Catching a Thief.

In Droversburg several years ago a gentleman present at a public gathering had the misfortune to have his watch stolen, a magnificent gold repeater. Standing up, he announced his loss and added: "It is now two minutes to 9. At 9 o'clock the watch will strike the hour, and as it is loud I ask every one to keep quiet. We shall then be able to put our hands on the thief." A dead silence ensued, and one individual, seized with a bad fit of coughing, endeavored to leave the room. He was promptly accosted, searched and the missing property found in his pocket. It afterward transpired that the watch would not have been struck, as it was out of order.—London Express.

A GLUTTON FOR WORK.

Story of the British Civil Service in the Last Century.

The British civil service during the middle of the last century was a delightful place for young gentlemen who wished a "job" with nothing to do. Mr. Arthur W. A. Becket in his "Recollections of a Humorist" describes his first day in the war office. After reading the Times through—no short task—and listening to the conversation of his colleagues for awhile he ventured to address his chief.

"Can I do anything for you?" I asked. "Is there anything for me to do?"

He seemed a little perplexed. The other denizens of the room paused for a moment in their conversation to hear his reply. It seemed to me that they appeared to be amused. My chief looked at me and then at the papers in front of him.

"Ah!" said he at last, with a sigh of relief. "Are you fond of indexing?"

I replied I was fond of anything and everything that could be of the slightest service to my country. If those were not the exact words I used, that was the spirit of my answer.

"I see, a glutton for work," observed my chief, with a smile that found reflection on the faces of my other colleagues. "Well, A. Becket, just index this pile of circulars."

I seized upon the bundle and returned to my desk. Oh, how I worked at those circulars! There were hundreds of them, and I docketed them with the greatest care and entered their purport into a book. From time to time my official chief, so to speak, looked in upon me to see how I was getting on.

"I say," said he, "there's no need to be in such a desperate hurry. I am not in immediate need of it." Index. You can take your time, you know. Wouldn't you like a stroll in the park? Most of us have a little walk during the day. We none of us stand on ceremony and are quite a happy family."

But, no; I stuck to my indexing and after some three days of fairly hard work found my labors done. I took up the bundle of circulars, row in apple pie order, and laid them on my chief's desk.

"I say, A. Becket," said he, "this won't do. You are too good a fellow to be allowed to cut your own throat, and for your brother's sake I will give you a tip. Don't do more than you are asked to do. Now, I gave you those circulars to index because you would bother me for work. I didn't want the index. Now it's done it's not the least bit of use to me. Of course it may come in useful some day, but I scarcely see how it can, as the lot are out of date. But of course it may," he added to save my feelings.

DEVELOPING A STAR.

How Mansfield Coached Margaret Anglin as Roxane.

Richard Mansfield in his preparation for "Cyrano" was unsparing of himself, and he was unsparing of others. Everything he had and everything he hoped for was at stake. Struggle and desperation were in the air. Nearly every one in the cast resigned or was discharged over and over again. Mr. Palmer's days and nights were devoted to diplomacy, and, thanks to his suavity, the heady heat of the day before was forgotten in the cool of the next morning.

An actress of international reputation and experience was engaged for Roxane. Rehearsals were under way when she resigned by cable. The orange girl's single line in the first act was being rehearsed by a young Canadian, Margaret Anglin. Mansfield had not seen her act, but he remarked the wondrous loveliness of her voice, and his intuition told him she had temperament. "Can you make yourself look beautiful enough for Roxane?" he asked. "I think I might if you can make yourself ugly enough for Cyrano," she answered. The part was hers on the instant. He coached her relentlessly. Again and again she cried that she could not do it. He reassured her, but not with soft persuasions. "You can, my dear, and you must. Now, again!" After rehearsals she went regularly in tears to Mr. Palmer to resign. He appealed to Mansfield to be more lenient. "I am only kind," was his reply.

"Roxane is a great part. Only one who has suffered can play such a role. This girl has the temperament and the emotions, but she is young and inexperienced. I cannot persuade her spirit. I must rouse it." And every day she reached new depths and new heights.—Paul Winstach in Scribner's.

Gordon's Last Chance.

By TAYLOR WHITE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Jimmie, do you speak slang?" demanded Maud Tolliver suddenly as her small brother came into the room.

"Do I walk on my feet?" demanded Jimmie in surprise. "Pipe your lay, angel face. I'll get you somehow, even if your speaks are all to the muddle. Throw it off your chest."

"It's this way," explained Maud. "You know Mr. Gordon?"

"I've seen him once or twice," admitted Jimmie, with a grin. Gordon was a regular visitor at the Tolliver home.

"Papa wants me to marry him," explained Maud. "He's so strict and proper that I hate him. I thought that if I were to talk slang and 'act up' perhaps he would leave me in peace. He hates a slangy girl. He said so last night."

Jimmie grinned appreciatively. He had no great liking for the eminently staid and correct Gordon. He hated men whose suits always looked as though it was the first time they had been worn.

His own preference was for Barry Spaulding, who occasionally offered him a cigarette and who talked to him precisely as though he was a grownup.

Gordon never seemed to see him, never laughed and joked, and Jimmie entered into the conspiracy with his whole heart after being assured that Maud would never disclose the source of her education in slang.

Before the week was out Gordon looked troubled. He was very much in love with Maud after his own fashion. There was no want of real affection, but Gordon was no gallant wooer. He had been accepted by the family, and in his quiet, patient fashion he was laying siege to Maud's heart.

He had fancied he had been making headway until she developed a trick of interlarding her speech with slang expressions. At first he was shocked, but as Maud acquired proficiency and grew more and more slangy Gordon withdrew from his campaign. Though he loved the girl as much as ever, he assured himself that a wife who used slang was utterly impossible.

In secret Maud gloated over the fact, but bore herself demurely when her father sharply questioned her concerning her treatment of Gordon, for the latter's visits had fallen off, and, though Gordon had pleaded business as an excuse, Mr. Tolliver had an idea that there was something else that might explain the lover's sudden lack of interest.

Then fate took a hand, and so it happened that Jimmie Tolliver, crossing the avenue, slipped on the muddy paving and fell directly in front of a rapidly advancing automobile.

There was a cry of horror from the spectators, but one man sprang forward and with an easy movement grasped the boy's arm and carried him to safety.

For a moment Jimmie was too dazed to comprehend; then he slowly came to realize that Gordon, unmoved as ever, stood beside him, answering the questions of the crowd, but refusing to give his name.

"All right, old man?" he asked as he saw that Jimmie was pulling himself together. "Suppose we move on. This crowd is a little too eager."

He signaled a passing taxicab and directed the driver to go to a tailor's where Jimmie's muddled garments might be made presentable. The rush of cold air drove the last of the cobwebs from Jimmie's brain, and, gazing admiringly at Gordon, he decided that Maud was wrong in her estimate of the man. There was fire under the ice, red blood beneath the waxen, immobile expression, and Jimmie's heart warmed to his rescuer.

"Say, Bo," he demanded suddenly, "are you still dead nuts on Maud?"

"I esteem your sister very highly," admitted Gordon.

"You're all right," declared Jimmie admiringly. "If you want to win cast your port over this way and make a noise like a listen."

The noise of a listener was continued long after the visit to the tailor's was concluded, Gordon's face was as expressionless as ever, but there was a twinkle in his eye.

Some evenings later Maud, coming downstairs, reached the lower hall just as Gordon was admitted by the butler. Jimmie had been cautioned under pain of losing his promised reward to say nothing of his rescue, so it was merely "that tiresome Kenneth Gordon" whom Maud greeted with perfunctory cordiality.

"I buttoned in to tear off a piece of talk with the boss bloomer wearer. Is he in?" asked Gordon.

"If you mean my father"—began Maud lily.

"That's the guy," interrupted Gordon. "Will you tell the delegate from the wax works to ask him to grease his heels and slide down here?"

"I will go myself," offered Maud nervously. Gordon was as coldly correct in appearance as ever, but perhaps he was drunk.

"Nix on the scamper," declared Gordon, raising a detaining hand. "Use the butler for the wireless, and we'll call out some conversation while he makes a home run."

"I must go," explained Maud. "I forgot something upstairs, and I must see about it at once."

"Tell it to wait," commanded Gordon. "I'm the head of the procession just now. Don't you bother about the water carriers."

"But"—began Maud. And Gordon interrupted again.

"Don't be a goat and butt in," he urged. "Hit the plush."

He pointed to a chair, and timidly Maud seated herself. As she had led the way into the parlor the butler had disappeared, supposing that he would not be required further. To ring for him now would only make a scandal among the servants. Perhaps her father would come down in a few minutes.

He usually spent the evening in the library when he did not go to the club, and in either event he must pass the open door. If the worst came she could call for the butler, but meanwhile perhaps she could induce Gordon to leave quietly. She took the chair indicated, sitting nervously on the edge, ready to spring up and run should occasion demand.

"It doesn't cost any more to have a whole chair," reminded Gordon as he sank into a seat between her and the door. "I want you to put me wise to some things. What's your grouch against me?"

"I have no grouch," protested Maud eagerly. "Indeed, I like you very much."

"I never saw you on the front steps waiting for me," said Gordon grimly. "Let it come out with a rush. I'm in wrong. How can I square myself?"

"There is nothing to be squared," insisted Maud. "I don't see how you can imagine such a thing."

"Naughty, naughty," reproved Gordon, shaking his forefinger at her admonishingly. "Look here, kiddo, put me next! You don't like me, and I like you. I can't help it if I've got a frozen face. It was wished on me, and it's none of my doings. Tell me how I can loosen up so you'll have a yin for me."

"A yin?" repeated Maud uncertainly. This was a word not in Jimmie's vocabulary.

"A yin—a yearning," explained Gordon. "I want you to think that I'm the whole works, and you won't even let me be the second hand. Fix me up and I can come into the big tent and be a part of the program. I'm the 'what is it' out in the freak tent, and I don't like the job. I may not be quite your style, but I can learn. I'm the star pupil in the little red schoolhouse, and I'll always be at the head of the class if you'll be the teacher. I love to love my teacher."

Maud sprang to her feet, her eyes blazing.

"Mr. Gordon," she said coldly, "I will not prolong this interview. I do not know what is the matter. I do not want to know, but you must go, please. I cannot listen to you when you talk this way."

Gordon had sprung to his feet when Maud rose, and now he smiled down into the flushed, angry face.

"It seems," he said a little sadly, "that my latest effort is no more successful than the earlier attempts. They say that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, and yet you are not pleased."

"What do you mean?" gasped Maud in astonishment.

"You learned slang for my benefit," he reminded. "When I do the same thing you object. Of course my slang is more pronounced than your own, but then you have only Jimmie, while I have the valuable assistance of several elevator boys, my office boy and the janitor's son, who qualifies as an expert. You use slang to disgust me—with yourself. I am using it to disgust you—with slang."

"And you know?" gasped Maud. "Jimmie has told?"

"Be it said to his credit that the temptation was great," said Gordon gently. "Do not blame the lad. He meant well in giving me my last chance to win you. He saw beneath the surface and was sorry for his part. I foolishly imagined that if I could excel you in the use of slang I might startle you into an interest that I see now you never can feel. It was a foolish experiment, Miss Tolliver, and I ask your pardon for having bored and then frightened you. It was my last chance, and I hoped that it might succeed."

"I gather from Jimmie's remarks that you fear paternal pressure will be brought to bear on you. I beg to assure you that I will so contrive the situation as not to involve you. I am—sorry that—the last chance—failed."

The little pauses in his speech were Gordon's only evidences of emotion. They were only little halts in the evenness of his soft, even voice, but they showed the strength of feeling, and it touched Maud with a sudden emotion.

"Don't go," she said softly, laying a detaining hand upon his arm. "Perhaps—the last chance has not—I mean." But she could say no more. Gordon's arms were outstretched, and in his face, no longer expressionless, there was a look of such appeal that she suffered herself to be drawn within their protecting circle. The last chance had won.

Character Counts No Substitutes Sold

In choosing a drug store, character counts for everything, and price counts for nothing—where health and safety are concerned. We adhere strictly to the principle that quality is all that counts in medicine.

Of course, when it comes to patent medicine, toilet articles, etc., the price is well known, and on those things our store has enjoyed a reputation for getting these articles for its customers at a material saving from the price elsewhere.

Our stocks are complete, and we never offer a customer some unknown concoction at a cut rate for a well advertised article in which he has confidence. We are proud of our reputation in the drug business—proud with a reason—and, positively assured that we can well please you, we invite you to try us, if you do not know, and continue as our friend if you now are.

Monon Route Excursions.

Home seekers excursion rates to Northwestern and southern points
first and third Tuesdays of each month. J. A. Michael, Agt.Won by a Turnout.

By RUTH CAMPBELL.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.With a derisive honk the car shot past the pedestrians and vanished in a cloud of dust. Dorothy Stanford regarded it angrily and stamped her foot."That's the third time he's done that thing. I believe he's doing it on purpose. If he passes us again I'll—"
What she did was not told,
for at that instant there sounded an other warning, and now a gray car shot past in pursuit of the red."They have a right to the road," defended Lawrence Mayling indignantly.
He could afford to be generous to a defeated foe, since Dolly had escaped automobiles and had taken to pedestrianism.Mayling had no car, but he was a good walker and the holder of the distance championship which was contested every Saturday.The Marathon races had roused the local love of athletics, wherefore the distance runner and the distance walker were the local heroes.This had given Larry Mayling his chance with Dolly, for his long legs car-ried him over the ground at a splendid speed, and he left all others far behind.All summer, with Dudley Blount
and Paul Frazer contending for Dolly's favor, he had seen little of her.
She had loved the swift, easy motion of the high powered cars, and she had been unable to resist their charms.
But since the athletic fad had struck Chesterton the owners of cars were decidedly out of it.Not alone were they regarded as persons too lazy to use nature's own means of locomotion, but in addition they got themselves very much disliked by speeding past pedestrian parties and raising a dust that made walking unpleasant."They should be kept off the course
at least," said Dolly severely. "The roads are for the people and not merely for a few selfish persons who have money enough to buy cars."Mayling smiled, but said nothing.
Not so long ago Dolly had protested against the deliberate fashion in which pedestrians occupied the road to the amusement of motorists.Now the shoe pinched the other foot,
and she had changed her opinions.
There might, after all, be a chance to win her hand before the walking fad
died.The situation was not due to the fact that Mayling cared for Dolly while she did not care for him, but Stephen Stanford, Dolly's father, had made a fortune in Chesterton, and Mayling argued that the easiest way to win a fortune was to marry one.With the coming of the athletic craze
he had seen his opportunity to win,
and he had pressed his advantage hard. Now he was training Dolly for the ladies' race, which was to be a feature of the coming week's sports,
and he was making the most of his opportunities.Blount and Frazer, whom he chose to regard as his disappointed rivals, persisted in running their cars over the triangular course on which the races were to be tried, and Dolly waxed more and more angry each time the cars passed them with the "honk" that was capable of so many interpretations.What made it worse was that she really cared for Dudley Blount, and she was both hurt and angry at the cavalier fashion in which he had abandoned all effort to win her favor when she had decided that walking was the thing.Dolly had expected that he would make some fight against the new fad,
but instead he had laughed when she urged him to take up the exercise."You would do well to leave the car in the garage for awhile," she counseled. "Walking is good for you.""I get plenty of that when the car breaks down," he reminded her. "I guess I'll stick to wheels, Dolly, and let you do the walking."Dolly had shrugged her shoulders to show her indifference, but she was none the less hurt and angry and proceeded to show marked interest in Mayling in order to teach Blount alesson that he seemed too indifferent to learn.As Frazer's red car passed them for about the tenth time in their circuit of the course Dolly had a sudden inspiration."Mr. Blount in his gray car cannot be far behind," she said. "Let us pretend that we do not hear and make him take the side of the road instead.""Do you think that he will?" asked Mayling uneasily."Of course he will turn out," said Dolly confidently. "He won't try to run us down, and when he sees that we do not intend to move out he will have to turn."She smiled radiantly at the idea, but found no answering smile on her es-cort's face. Mayling went white to the lips at the thought of what might happen were the plan to miscarry.He did not think of the girl, only of himself, for Mayling despite his athletic prowess was no moral hero.He was not afraid to fight. Indeed, he rather welcomed the opportunity,
for he was reasonably certain to knock out his man, but to walk with one's back to an auto and to dare a rival to keep on were not at all to his liking.When the faint humming of the motor told of the coming of the gray racer Dolly smiled delightedly. Noticing signs of a bolt on the part of her companion as the frantic sounding of the horn told that Blount was near,
she caught at his coat.In an ecstasy of fear Mayling threw
off her hold and dashed for the side of the road just as Blount, to avoid an accident, took chances on the roadside.Mayling ran directly into the path
of the auto, and then, with another
quick twist of the steering wheel, Blount threw the car at the stone fence.The next instant there was the sound of exploding tires, and the driver was thrown heavily to the frozen ground.He lay still and white, and with a little cry of terror Dolly ran to his side.
Tenderly she raised his head into her lap and with her handkerchief stanch-ed the flow of blood from the cut in his forehead, while Mayling stood wonderingly by."Can't you go for a doctor?" she asked when at last she looked up. "If you had done as I told you it would have been all right, but you had to run at the wrong moment for all the world like a scared chicken. I thought that athletics made men brave, but I was wrong. It seems to make them foolish. That action of Mr. Blount's was braver than anything you ever dared think of.""I guess I won't need a doctor, Dolly," murmured the injured man.
"That is all the tonic I need. It would have been all right if you had kept to the road, but when Mayling ran directly in my path I—""You risked your life for his," finished Dolly proudly. "Dudley, you were splendid.""I guess I had better get a carriage anyhow," said Mayling sheepishly as he started for the town. The scene was not to his liking.The two beside the road did not even seem to realize that he was gone,
for in each other's eyes they read the old, old story and found it delightfully new. Blount had won by a turnout. His ruined car and aching head were forgotten.

The Farmer of the Future.

The future farmer will subvert his land and defy drought as well as floods. He will become a scientific forester, and every farm will produce
wood and lumber as well as wheat and apples. A single acre will produce what ten acres yield now. Women will work outdoors as heartily as men—in fact, they will be the horticulturists and the truck gardeners. There will be closer relation between the producer and the consumer, ignoring a horde of middlemen who frequently waste more than is destroyed by ignorant help and insect foes combined. Under the alliance with the school the farm will be valued not only for its gross weight of products, but for its poems and its education. As our schools become places for applying as well as acquiring knowledge, our farm homes will become integral parts of the garden
school and the school farm. The alliance between the home and the school will become very close. A valley full of farms is already the nearest to paradise that we have, but the future will unfold its wealth and hundredfold its delights.—Independent.

Bees Can Hear.

Bees can hear. In sparsely settled countries, where farmers have very few hives of bees and are not in it for the money, they have very primitive methods of catching bees when they swarm, or, in other words, when the young bees start to find a home of their own. Sometimes these bees get away and go for miles and are not caught. But neighbors are on the watch during this season and most are caught.How? By throwing leaves, small sticks, etc., to arrest their flight, because they will immediately fly around anything in their way and these bring them to the ground. Now, sometimes these swarms are so high in the air
that they cannot be reached by throwing, so farmers get old pans, kettles, etc., and make as large a racket as possible, and the bees are attracted by the sounds and immediately light near them. Now, what better proof is needed that bees can hear?—Letter in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

pense account?"

"Oh, no; not that."

"What troubles her, then?"

"Just her husband's bank account."

sometimes leads to trouble or embarrassment, as shown by the following article from The Chicago Examiner, Nov. 15, 1908.THE KING OF DIAMONDS HAS LICENSE TAKEN AWAY.
Alleged Bogus Gem Man Rails at Newspapers.BURLINGTON, IA., Nov. 14.—For some time past newspapers in Iowa cities have been reporting the operations of a man whom they called "The King of Diamonds."
It appears that there was nothing criminal in his operations, which consisted in selling "phony" diamonds, but his methods of procedure were not exactly according to the rules. He usually drops into a jobbing house and tells of meeting such and such a representative of the house on the road and selling him a diamond to be delivered at the store. He explains that the diamond is only an imitation, and offers to sell anybody else around the place the same thing. Thus he works up an interest and usually succeeds in selling some of his glassware. Mr. Jack of Diamonds dropped into City Auditor Norton's office one morning and secured a license to sell his wares. He had only been out a short time, however, until Chief of Police Hiltz learned of him. Calling in the peddler, he relieved him of his license and gave him back the money he had paid for it. As the man had committed no crime he was released. He was bitter against the newspapers for injuring his business.If you want to wear a simulation diamond, to the ordinary observer almost

HOW HE WAS NICKNAMED

Tree on the Campus Possibly Planted by Senator Voorhees May Have Been the Origin of the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," Title.

Mr. J. P. Voorhees' attention was attracted, the other day, by an object in the campus, which recalls the days when his father, the late senator, was a young, ambitious and energetic student of Asbury. The object was a tree—a sycamore tree—a "tall sycamore" tree, the kind from which Mr. Voorhees' father received his name, "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash." A curious fact remains that Senator Daniel W. Voorhees is said to have planted a sycamore sapling, when, as a student, he attended Asbury University; and it is further supposed that, from this circumstance, he came to be called "The Tall Sycamore." It is thought that the tree seen by the son may be the same as that claimed to have been set out by the father. Mr. Voorhees will interest someone in having a proper label placed on the trunk, if this tree should prove to be the one spoken of above.

Another account of the manner in which Senator Voorhees is said to have received his nickname of "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" is that, in his earlier career upon the stump and as an orator, being very tall and slender, he had hair the color of the ball of the sycamore. He wore the hair cut short and it stood up all over his head, the latter thus resembling a sycamore ball; and he was called "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash."

A Wedding Decoration

Whether it was a mistake or a joke or simply an example of bad taste is a question that is still puzzling most of the passengers. But no matter about that. It certainly was a floral masterpiece. Full four feet it stood from the ground, in the form of a cross. Roses white and roses red composed the body of the cross, and dainty white blossoms and green leaves formed the trimmings. In the center the word "Peace" was spelled out in rosebuds.

Everybody in the car admired the offering, and when the boy set it down on the floor all leaned forward to examine it more closely. At length one old gentleman stood up and readjusted his glasses in order to get a better look at it.

"That is a mighty pretty posy you've got there," he said. "Who, may I ask, is dead?"

The boy giggled.

"Nobody 't I know of," he said. "This ain't for a funeral; it's for a wedding."

The old gentleman sat down heavily.

"Good Lord!" he said. "What idiot ever ordered 'Peace' inscribed on a wedding decoration?"

The rest of the passengers smiled, and many of them, being married, wondered as well, but nobody ventured an explanation.—New York Times.

Death and Snuff.

A certain Margaret Wilson of Westminster, who was an inveterate snuff taker, enjoined that a quantity of Scotch snuff should be placed in her coffin. She also ordered that the arrangements connected with her funeral should be as follows: "Six men to be my bearers who are known to be the greatest snuff takers in the parish of St. James, Westminster. Instead of mourning, each to wear a snuff colored beaver hat, which I desire may be bought for the purpose and given to them. Six maidens of my old acquaintance to bear my pall, each to carry a box filled with the best Scotch snuff, to take for their refreshment as they go along." Snuff was also to be thrown on the threshold of deceased's dwelling before the cortege passed out, snuff was to be strewn on the ground at every twenty yards in advance of the coffin, and the officiating clergyman's fee was to be proportionate to the quantity of snuff he consumed during the ceremony.—London Globe.

At that point the average temperature for January is nearly 64 degrees below zero. This town is 330 feet above the level of the sea, and during the entire winter the weather is calm and clear.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL INTRUSION.

[Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.]

No one, excepting the sick restored to health, has reason to feel more thankful for that wonderful advance science has made within the last ten or twenty years than I. But right here in the beginning I must break away from my subject to tell a story.

Margaret May charmed me by what I consider the higher traits. She was a sober girl of an intellectual type, with excellent principles and elevated ideals. I am not a man to be pleased with a gay, frolicsome girl, however kind hearted, however winning. It was, therefore, natural that I should yield to the characteristics of Margaret. We became engaged, and everything looked well for our future happiness when my fiancée began to show a succession of singular changes. One evening when I went to see her she bounded into the room like a hoiden, threw her arms about my neck, kissed me several times in rapid succession and, beginning with "You bad boy," upbraided me for not having come earlier. When I asked her for what she had wished me, she said that a circus had come to town, and she was "dying" to attend that evening's performance. Astonished, I asked her if the next night would not do as well. She said it would not, and when I pressed her for a reason she said she could give me one that she couldn't wait.

It was altogether too late to go to the circus that evening, so I spent the rest of it with her in the cozy library where we had passed so many happy hours, often taking book after book from the shelves, rambling in them together and calling each other's attention to favorite passages. But, alas, there was no such enjoyment for us tonight. Margaret spoke of the books as "musty, dusty things," in which she had no interest, and insisted in talking only upon the most frivolous topics.

It is needless to say that I was not only disappointed, but shocked. Could this be my steady, well balanced, intellectual Margaret? I was inclined to doubt it. Could it be her twin sister? I knew that she had no twin sister. I endured her prattle as long as I was able; then, telling her that I had some work to do before going to bed, I rose to go.

"And you will take me to the circus tomorrow night?" she asked, with a pout.

"Certainly if you wish it," I replied, and when I could escape from an utterance of caresses left her.

That night and the next day my brain was in a turmoil. I was like a man who had lost his love. I brooded instead of working till after office hours and in the evening called to take Margaret to the circus. The maid who received me at the door went upstairs to announce me and, returning, told me that Miss May was not feeling well and had gone to bed. There was no message of disappointment at missing the performance nor at not seeing me. Indeed, the maid told me that she thought her mistress had not expected me that evening. This would have been natural had it not been for the engagement, since it was an evening I seldom called.

The next of my usual weekly visits was Sunday, and I called, dreading to again find the hoiden. I was agreeably disappointed. Margaret was her usual self except that she showed signs of overstrained nerves. Something told me to refrain from mentioning her singular personality when I had last seen her, to wait and observe. During the visit and the next two visits she was her own sweet self, barring her altered health. Finally I referred to her desire to visit the circus. She seemed surprised, mystified, and when I told her the whole story said, with a nervous tremor, "Oh, she'll ruin me!"

"Was some one else than you with me that evening?" I asked.

"Yes—no, I was with you, but she dominated me." And she hurried out of the room.

I was not admitted to see Margaret—indeed, I did not care to see her; I was dissatisfied for a month. Then I called on her. What was my surprise to find her a different person from either of the two I had known. From the moment we met she talked of women's rights, women's voting, women's superiority to men and finally told me that if I interfered with her in any of these objects to which she proposed to devote her life we must proceed by separate paths.

I left her maddened. Had I not been puzzled as well I would have broken my engagement then and there, but curiosity prevented. Several months passed in which I continued to visit her, hoping that she would settle down into her old personality resolutely.

When she was another I would turn away from her; when she was my own Margaret I loved her still the same. As the hoiden I found it possible to be amused with her; as the "strong minded" woman I could not endure her. I was not able to get the real Margaret to talk of the other two, but from hints she dropped I inferred that she knew of their existence, and she hated them.

One day I received a call from a psychological specialist. He informed me that Margaret was under his care; that two other personalities besides her own appeared to inhabit her body and at times dominated her. By psychic methods of his own invention he was trying to enable her to dominate them and thus return to a normal condition.

He succeeded, the intruders were driven out, and Margaret is my wife.

HOLDING THE CELLO.

An Anecdote of Dupont and the Emperor Napoleon.

Napoleon, in a way, was fond of music. It is admitted that the musical tastes of "the Corsican ogre" were not elevated. But for all that he loved singing so much that many a time after a concert he ordered the vocalists to come to the palace and sing before him and the Empress Josephine.

A curious anecdote is told of his brusque manner of dealing with artists. One night at a concert at the Tuilleries, while Dupont, the famous violoncellist, was performing a solo, the emperor suddenly entered. His majesty nodded his head approvingly and when the piece was finished said to Dupont:

"How the deuce do you manage to keep that instrument so motionless?" And, taking up the cello, he tried to jam it between his spurred boots.

Poor Dupont nearly fainted when he saw his treasure treated like a war horse. For several minutes he looked on, trembling from head to foot. At last, however, he darted forward and called out "Sire!" in such pathetic tones that the emperor handed him back the instrument.

Dupont thereupon showed how the instrument was held, but every time his imperial master extended his hand to attempt to do it himself Dupont threw himself back in alarm till finally Josephine whispered something to her husband, who burst out laughing and put an end to the cello lesson.—New York Sun.

SHETLAND PONIES.

Active as Terriers, Sure Footed as Mules, Patient as Donkeys.

Shetlands are "foaled in the fields, live in the fields and die in the fields." They have a rooted dislike for indoor life and thrive best when allowed to feed naturally on green grass, with perhaps hay in winter. Until two years old nature provides a soft, woolly covering. Afterward the mature coat of hair appears, to be shed each spring, when the ponies appear sleek and handsome. Full grown, they are immensely strong, with wide quarters, powerful legs and a great width and depth over the heart and lungs. And, as Bengie wrote in 1870 in his "Four in Shetland," "The Shetland pony is the most lovable of animals in the wide creation. They are sprightly and active as terriers, sure footed as mules and patient as donkeys." The horse is accredited as the noblest of the lower animals, and the Shetland pony stands at the head of this noble race as the most intelligent and faithful of them all.

The great value of the Shetland to the coal miners lies in its ability to work in the low galleries in thin seams pits, where other ponies could not travel. Their strength does not correspond with their diminutive proportions, and they will travel thirty miles a day in the seams, drawing from twelve to fourteen hundred-weight. Underground their lot is hard, but use becomes second nature, and they are treated, if roughly, not unkindly.—St. James' Gazette.

The Chinaman and His Dragon.

If a Chinaman wishes for happiness and peace in this world and the next he feels obliged to consult his majesty the dragon as to where his house shall be built and his grave be made. Through the earth, so say the Chinese, flow two currents—the dragon and the tiger. Now, for a man to have good fortune in life or, as he would say in "pigeon English," to "catch a chance," his house must be put in a certain position in reference to these currents. If he is to rest quietly in his grave, that also must be correctly placed. So called "wise men" make a business of choosing favorable sites for homes and graves, professing by means of a wand and incantations and other kinds of tomfoolery to be able to detect the presence of the dragon and the tiger and to tell in what direction they flow.

Skating.

Skating is believed to have been invented in northern Europe in prehistoric times. William Fitz-Stephen speaks of it in London toward the end of the twelfth century, but it did not really catch hold until the cavaliers who had been in exile with Charles II. brought it with them from Holland. On Dec. 1, 1662, Mr. Pepps, having occasion to cross the park, "first in my life, it being a great frost, did see people sliding with their skates, which is a very pretty art." On the 8th he went purposely to see the sight and again found it "very pretty."—London Chronicle.

Works Both Ways.

"So you think it is an advantage to a man to go to congress for awhile?"

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum. "It gives the people in his own town a chance to think he is a great man in Washington and the people in Washington a chance to think he is a great man in his own town."—Washington Star.

Her Motto.

"I think it is high time," said Mrs. Oldcastle, "for the people of this country to take a firm stand against vivisection."

"So do I," replied her hostess. "No north, no south, is my motto."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Take Advantage of Warm Weather And Dry Ground to Do Some Mid-Winter Farming.

Reports from the country today are that the farmers are taking advantage of the moisture that fell Monday night and are not allowing the plows to stand idle in the furrows. For the first time in years the farmers are plowing in the middle of the winter and Sullivan County farmers are taking to the work like fish to water. They are hard at work for they hold to the belief that a mid-winter stirring is the best possible thing for the soil and serves to enrich it.—Sullivan Times.
