AND JUDGE FIXES ELECTRO-
CUTION FOR EARLIEST DATE
ALLOWED BY LAW. SLAYER CLOSELY GUARDED DURING TRIAL AND PERSONS EN-TERING COURT ROOM SEAR-CHED

Indianapolis, April 28—William
Huff, colored, slayer of 14-year old
Artha Huff, was sentenced to death in the criminal court late yesterday afternoon. The jury was out only twenty minutes, returning a verdict at 6 o'clock.
Judge James A. Collins set the date for death by electrocution for
Aug. 5 at the Indiana state prison.
According to state law the death penalty shall be inflicted before the sun rises on a day not less than 30 days after conviction. In setting the date, Judge Collins chose a time of an even hundred days after conviction for the electrocution.
The deadly silence in the court room was broken only by the heartbroken sobs of Mrs. Sarah Smock, the murderer's mother, as William A.
Huff, clerk of the court, read the finding of guilty to the five charges of murder in the first degree and stipulating the penalty as death.

FIRST OF A SERIES OF THREE BASEBALL GAMES BETWEEN THE TWO INDIANA RIVALS WILL BE PLAYED ON McKEEN FIELD— RESULT HAS DOUBLE MEANING

The Wabash College baseball team will come to Greencastle tomorrow to meet the DePauw Tigers in the first of a three game series to be played this season.

As the athletic relations of the two schools are just now in a strained condition, with an edict having been issued by the presidents of each school that unless the bitterness exhibited in former games be done away with a severance of athletic relations will be ordered. The game tomorrow will be of special interest. Not only is a baseball victory at stake, but continued athletic relations also are in the balance.

Although defeated in each of the games played last week on its trip to Kentucky, the DePauw team expects a victory over Wabash tomorrow.

DEPAUW MEN IN LINE FOR BISHOPRIC

DR. GEORGE R. GROSE, PRESIDENT OF UNIVERSITY; DR. EARNEST C. WARING AND DR. R. J. WADE MENTIONED PROMINENTLY WITH VACANCIES TO BE FILLED SOON

Much interest is being manifested just now among the Methodists of the state and especially Greencastle by the session of the General Methodist Episcopal Conference to be held in Des Moines, Iowa beginning May 1, at which session several bishops will be elected.

Especially interested are Greencastle and DePauw people because of the fact that several DePauw men, to be exact three DePauw men are prominently mentioned in connection with the vacancies which are to be filled.

Dr. George R. Grose, president of DePauw, Dr. Earnest C. Waring, editor of the Western Christian Advocate and graduate of DePauw in the class of '98 and Dr. R. J. Wade of Goshen, son of Dr. C. U. Wade of DePauw and also a graduate of DePauw in the class of '96 are the three mentioned in connection with the vacancies.

Should Dr. George R. Grose be chosen to fill one of the vacancies he would be the third successive president of DePauw to be elevated to the highest rank in the province of the Methodist church.

FRIEND STEVEDORE.

I'm a sweetin' army stevedore, I gets a soldier's pay.
I joined up for a soldier once—I'll not forget the day—
I gets a gat all proper an' comes pikin' overseas
Prepared to meet this Jerry gent an' bring him to his knees.
Two long, sad years I've been here in a-jugglin' army freight
From Somewhere West of Old New York an' East of Golden Gate—
I've got a World War ribbon—gold stripes a full quartet—
The army's come an' gone again—I'm steve-a-dorin' yet.

I've worked alongside Jerry, an' old Frenchy's helped me through
An' heathen Chinks what never blinks, an' bucks from Timbuctoo;
An' Greeks from Asia Minor, an' some Spaniards, Poles an' Wops.
An' Tommies fresh from London town, an' ex-Cajun cops.
It's "An' avant that box car," an' a "Halle, la! Git! Alley!"
"Zwei cases nach," now "Tout de suite—tools sweeter, all vous play."
"Mannas fini arbeit," "Mannas?" "Nichts compree!"
"Demsin, then, Aael—morgen!" "Si compree . . . yes . . . ya . . . out!"

I'm a sweetin' army stevedore, I gets a soldier's pay.
But I parleys all the lingoos what they habbas here today.
It's all-rime-mame-chore what they shoots, I gets 'em on the spot;
The lieble choppin' hard and cold, the Wop what's soft an' hot;
The Chinese pidgin sing-song, an' the Alabama drawl.
The bloomin' Cockney chatter an' the patois of the Gaul.
I'm a jingo on the lingo, I'm the goods "comme interprete"—
The army's come an' gone again—I'm steve-a-dorin' yet.

ON THE INSTALLMENT PLAN

Theatrical Critic May Have Meant Well by His Advice, but Some Will Doubt It.

The stage manager was often at his wits' end to know what to do with an amateur dramatic critic who regularly attended the theater and kept up a running conversation in a loud voice about the merits or demerits of the plays he saw.

The piece was a thrilling melodrama of the old school when the critic happened to be there one night. The hero—an understudy—was slender and short; the lovely heroine tall and stout.

"Marry that man!" shouted the villain to the princess, and pointing to the hero, "and I'll ruin you both!"

The heroine then screams and falls into the arms of the hero, who is expected to carry her out. But on this occasion the slender hero, doubting his fitness for the task before him, hesitated.

"All right, mister," yelled the critic, "Just take what you can, and come back for the rest!"

Intoxicated Cows.

Some cows actually disgraced their home and reputation by going home the other night just like a pack of old boozers. The truth of this statement is affirmed by a farmer in England, and is related in one of the leading London dailies. One day the farmer's cows broke into an orchard where large heaps of fermenting cider apples lay upon the ground awaiting removal. Evidently the cows were fascinated and ate considerable quantities. The result was that when the farmer sent his boy to bring the cows home for milking they were all prostrate on the ground. After an effort they struggled to their feet, tottered across the orchard, only to fall in the ditch like intoxicated human beings. For a couple of days they remained quite helpless, and no talk was forthcoming. Later, however, they completely recovered.

Origin of Navel Orange.

The navel orange originated in Brazil and was introduced into the United States in 1870 by William Saunders of the United States department of agriculture at Washington. It was distributed by him to the orange growing section of this country and was often spoken of as the "Washington navel orange." Its peculiar formation, which gives the fruit its name, is due to the development of a secondary axis, with more or less cells, in the center of the fruit; the fact that it is practically seedless, combined with its sprightly flavor, has made this variety of orange popular, and it is largely grown in southern California and increasingly in Florida. The trees are propagated by cutting and by budding or grafting other stocks.

SHE HAD FORGOTTEN.

"Mother, wasn't that a funny dream I had last night?" said a little boy who was busily engaged with his breakfast cereal.
"Why, I'm sure I don't know," replied his mother. "I haven't the slightest idea what your dream was about."
"Why, mother, of course you know!" said the boy reproachfully. "You were in it."—Youth's Companion.

Moment of Embarrassment.

"Some men are so strong that they always have their own way."
"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum; "but a man who always has his own way is liable to be a little disappointed when he stops once in awhile and looks around and listens for the applause."

NAMED AFTER ENGLISH CITIES

Boston and Lynn, Massachusetts, Are Neighbors Here as They Are Across the Water.

The oldest place bearing the name Lynn is Lynn Regis, or Kings Lynn to give the English meaning of the Latin word "regis." It is a town of about 20,000 inhabitants still possessing considerable commerce but a place of importance three centuries and more ago, when it was often visited by kings. It is a seaport of Norfolk county, England, situated on the Great Ouse river not far from the Wash, which is a great bay indenting the east coast of England. Lynn Regis is near the south side of the Wash and directly across the Wash is the ancient city of Boston.

In early colonial times a settlement sprang up near Boston, Mass., to which was given the Indian name, Saugus. In 1636 a minister named Samuel Whiting came to Saugus, and from that time until his death in 1679 he was the pastor of the congregation. He was born and brought up in Lynn Regis, Norfolk, England, and a year after his arrival at Saugus the name of the settlement was changed to Lynn in honor of the pastor's birthplace. And so Boston in the New World came to have a Lynn as a neighbor, just as ancient Boston in England has Lynn Regis a neighbor across the waters of the Wash.

INTELLIGENCE OF HIGH ORDER

Remarkable Stories of Sagacity Shown by Animals in Connection With the Great War.

The high intelligence of horses was superbly demonstrated during the war, and some day a lover of the horse will collate the many wonderful incidents in which he played a leading part. One of these will be the vagaries of a Canadian general's thoroughbred, which again and again refused to budge to the spur at times when there was apparently no evidence of the slightest danger. Twice he saved his master's life by deliberate acts of insubordination. The latest yarn about a pony that had a race-track reputation is worth repeating in this connection. Every morning its owner brought this pony into the dining room of the house in which the narrator was billeted, and led him round the table. The pony was offered all sorts of dainties, but he would only touch slices of bread and butter, of which he was inordinately fond. It was not a big room, and there was not much space between the wall and the table, so if he had shown any restlessness the table and all that was on it must have been demolished. He, however, behaved always with the manners of a retriever dog, and only the slices of bread and butter had to be replenished.

Heligoland Dismantled.
A dispatch from Berlin to the Associated Press states that the Heligoland defenses are today dismantled. The island and its thousands of tons of masonry and gun emplacements is all that remains of this once most formidable fortress. With the guns dismantled, the destruction of the military harbor works and various fortifications has proceeded. Although this stronghold cost over 175 million dollars, its guns were fired but once throughout the war, when the British warship Shannon was the target. The allies recognized that it would have been impossible to silence its batteries. The artificial harbor works and the ground on which the barracks stand are to be removed and the site returned to the sea.—Scientific American.

NOT SO BAD.
"This is a terrible business."
"Oh, I don't know. I've lived with my wife's relatives for the last four years."

Statue to Balboa.
Panama is to have a statue of Balboa, the discoverer of the Pacific ocean. The contract for the work has already been signed at Madrid, and the monument has been entrusted to the sculptor Benlliure. That there is to be no undue haste in the matter is signified by the fact that the contract does not call for the delivery of the monument until two years after the signing of the agreement. The opportunities for a most effective piece of work are many, with the likeness of the man overlooking the ocean of his discovery. The grandiose setting would seem to call for a grandiose actor to dominate the scene.

Demand for Change.
The total number of coins of American money produced in 1919 was 778,642,000 and their value was $20,777,000. They included 3,679,000 half dollars, 15,104,000 quarters, 54,529,000 dimes, 76,305,000 five-cent pieces and 589,035,000 pennies.

Most Illustrious Corpse.
The Dorset (England) village of Worth Maltravers, which is to be sold by auction, has few claims to fame. The most illustrious corpse in its churchyard seems to be that of one Benjamin Jesty, who died in 1810, and who was the first person who introduced the cow-pox by inoculation, and who from his great strength of mind made the experiment from the cow on his wife and two sons in the year 1774. Most readers will agree with Sir Frederick Treves's comment that "the epitaph says nothing of the greater strength of mind shown by the wife and two sons in submitting themselves to this hazard, nor how it came to pass that the iron-minded Benjamin did not first try the experiment upon himself."

ITS PURPOSE.
While waiting for his train the young man amused himself with the various slot machines. At last he came to one which did not respond to the penny he deposited.
"Look here!" he said to a porter who was standing by. "I've tried my strength on one machine and I've tried my weight on another, but what's this apparatus? I've put in a penny and got nothing."
"Oh," responded the porter, "that's to try your temper."

Esperanto Bible.
Esperantists will learn with interest that the unpublished MS. of the late Dr. L. L. Zamenhof's translation from the Hebrew into Esperanto has been successfully transferred from Warsaw to England, and that it is to be published jointly by the British and Foreign Society and the National Bible Society of Scotland. For some years the new testament has been available, thanks to the labors of the Rev. J. Cyprian Rust (Soham, Cambridgeshire), and the same Esperanto expert is at the head of the revision committee which has undertaken the reading over of the Old Testament.

SURELY MAN'S GOLDEN AGE

As W. D. Howells Writes of It, the Best Years Are Between Fifty and Sixty.

After 61 one must not take too many chances with oneself, but I should say that the golden age of man is between 50 and 60, when one may safely take them. One has peace then from the different passions; if one has been tolerably industrious one is tolerably prosperous; one has fairly learned one's trade or has mastered one's art; age seems as far off as youth; one is not so much afraid of death as earlier; one likes joking as much as ever and loves beauty and truth as much; family cares are well out of the way; if one has married timely one no longer nightly walks the floor with even the youngest child; the marriage ring is then a circle half rounded in eternity. It is a blessed time; it is, indeed, the golden age, and no age after it is more than silver, writes W. D. Howells in Harper's.

The best age after it may be that between 80 and 90, but one cannot make so sure of 90 as of 70 in the procession of years, and that is where the gold turns silver. But silver is one of the precious metals, too, and it need not have any alloy of the baser ones. I do not say how it will be in the years between 90 and 100. I am not yet confronted with that question. Still, all is not gold between 80 and 90, as it is between 50 and 60.

In that time, if one has made oneself wanted in the world, one is still wanted; but between 80 and 90, if one is still wanted, is one wanted as much as ever? It is a painful question, but one must not shrink it, and in trying for the answer one must not do less than one's utmost, at a time when one's utmost will cost more effort than before. This is a disadvantage of living so long, but we cannot change the condition if we wish to live.

There is always the question whether one does wish to live, but for the average happy or unhappy man, I should say yes, yes, yes. We would ignore the fact that there are some men so unhappy beyond the vast average that they cannot wish to live. These kill themselves, but speaking without statistics, I do not believe these are often people of 80 and after. Apparently life seldom so unbearable with these that one almost never hears of their suicide.

Wanted Help.

Little Bobby had been learning his Sunday school lesson and was very much impressed with the idea of the omnipresence of God. A few nights after his mother asked him to bring her a bottle of milk from the back porch.

"Me can't," Bobby demurred. "All dark out there."

"But you're not afraid to go anywhere, Bobby," she reasoned. "You know God won't let anything hurt you."

"Is God out there on the porch in the dark?" queried Bobby.

"Certainly he is. Didn't you learn that God was everywhere?"

Cautiously Bobby opened the door a few inches and peering out, called: "God, will you please hand me that milk bottle out there?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Excess of Oil Production.

Conditions in Oklahoma when the great Cushing pool came in illustrated another aspect of the oil situation. The oil production, for a time was far in excess of storage and transportation facilities, so that oil was stored on the ground, behind earthen dikes, and run into dry creeks that were dammed up to form reservoirs. From sheer excess of production over local demand, the price fell to 40 cents a barrel, not because that was the value of the oil to the refinery at Chicago or Bayonne, but because there was no way at the time to get it there, and new wells were coming in by the dozen day after day.—Ray Morris in The World's Work.

How Strange!

Mrs. Jenkins was reading the daily paper. Presently she exclaimed, "What strange things these society people do, Jeremiah!" "What's up now?" asked Jeremiah, who was half asleep. "Well, it says here about the launching of a ship. 'With graceful ease the huge vessel slid into the water. Just after the duchess of Dumspshire had cracked a bottle of champagne on her nose.' It must have hurt her! Why should she mutilate her face like that, Jeremiah?"

Hard-Boiled Philosopher.

"Fire water was the ruination of the man," remarked the stranger in Carson Gulch. "So it was," replied Three Finger. "Maybe it's just as well we're sobered for prohibition. If there had been anything but total abstinence the pesky Injuns might have got right on bossin' the in-tire continent."—Washington Star.

Plenty of Hope.

"It seems to be a big run to the morrow," commented Yorick Hamm. "I wonder if I could make good?" "Don't see why not," declared Hamlet. "Hire a litter of puppies and a sick mule, and with your acting ability you're bound to make good."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

No Lightsome Exercise.

"I am told you are playing politics," protested Senator Sorghum. "You might as well use the word 'dancing' to describe the way a man gets over the field when an irascible bull is after him."

"MEMORY" TREES GOOD IDEA

Many Are Being Planted to Commemorate the War Services of Americans in the Great War.

A good many trees have been planted here and there over the country by way of memorializing American soldiers who gave up their lives in the war. Mostly they are for individuals—a single tree set in a place somehow associated in his lifetime with the one who is gone. A number of groves or parks and stretches of roadway are planned, however, where trees are to be planted in groups or in rows in honor of the fallen ones of certain communities. They call them "memory trees," which is a good name.

Of the single trees an illustration is one planted by pupils of the Force school in Washington, which was attended by Quentin Roosevelt when he was a young boy. He was the only former pupil to lose his life in the world war. A committee of 12, formed by appointment of a member from each class, will have the care of the tree; as each member graduates from his class he appoints a member from the incoming class to take his place. Thus there will always be a committee at the school to look after this tree.

WHEN MULE WAS A NOVELTY

Sent as a Present to George Washington, It Created Something of a Sensation Here.

The first mule seen in this country was sent to George Washington by the king of Spain. The mule measured 15 hands high, and his ears were 14 inches long. His disposition was so ungrateful that General Washington remarked on the beast's inability to appreciate "republican enjoyment."

The mule was given much publicity. Washington sent him out on a tour of the South, where his long ears, peculiar voice and strange appearance drew large crowds and created much excitement. The attention lavished upon the mule forced the keeper to hurry him from place to place at such a pace that the animal reduced considerably. Washington having been shocked with his condition upon his reappearance in Mount Vernon.

It is said that Washington looked forward to producing a breed of mules suitable to draw the family carriage, but history does not record whether the first president carried out this plan. He was, however, at all times very enthusiastic over mules, and commented upon them in glowing terms as an excellent race of animals.

Woman Good Trapper.

Trapping predatory animals is scarcely the kind of occupation in which a woman might be expected to distinguish herself, even with the great extension of the range of feminine activity to which we have been accustomed lately. Mrs. Ada Tingley of Idaho is reported, however, by the Northwestern division of the United States biological survey to be so successful in this employment that her male rivals are finding it hard to keep up with her records. Her victims are mainly coyotes, bobcats, wolves, lynxes and mountain lions. At 8:30 every morning Mrs. Tingley mounts her cayuse and rides off to her traps, of which she runs six lines, of 50 each. She uses a fish bait prepared by a secret formula.

A GREAT CHANGE.

"Did your war article get by the News Censor?"

"I believe it did, only I didn't recognize it after it passed."

Burglar-Proof Glass.

There is a glass of French invention which is intended to be proof against burglars. So many cases of burglary have been committed by the breaking of show-windows and snatching of valuables on exhibition that a special effort has been made to end this particular form of theft.

The French glass, it appears, is produced by a secret process, but the makers admit that thickness and care in its manufacture are its principal essentials. It is made about three-quarters of an inch thick and on test has resisted the blow of a ten-pound iron disk. The same blow would have shattered ordinary plate glass completely.

Eats Any Old Thing.

A wood-boring beetle in California, undismayed by lead or even by alloys that are harder than lead, has put hundreds of telephones out of use. The beetle bores into the cables that carry the wires, then water gets in and makes the wire useless until the damage is repaired. As yet no one has found a way to keep the beetles out. Perhaps some entomological Burbank will train wireworms to plug holes or tapeworms to wrap them.—Youth's Companion.

THE GUIDING SPIRIT

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

The little suburb of Grassmere was so near to the city that the street cars ran out to it. Adrian and Cora Mills felt both proud and pleased when they signed a lease "for the loveliest little house in the place!"

"We are the luckiest people in the world," declared Adrian. "Surely there is no landlord who is not a high-toned vampire. We were to be raised 80 percent on our city flat if we stayed."

"Double the space, with all the glories of country life at less than our old rent!" added Cora.

The owner, a rich widow, was not of the profiteering kind, and little Daisy, four years old, acted so prettily and her parents were so grateful, that Mrs. Deane felt it a pleasure to help on their happiness.

They were to move to Grassmere the following week. One evening Adrian came home with news that somewhat marred the radiant future.

"I was out measuring the rooms," he observed, "and I got talking with the man living opposite. Did you notice the home just next to ours, Cora?"

"You mean the cement two story that met my fancy?"

"Just that—our nearest neighbor. His name is Jonas Price and he lives all alone. My informant says he isn't a very pleasant kind of a man—rich, grasping, a regular misanthrope. The former tenants left because they couldn't stand him. He complained of the noise their children made; he poisoned their dog."

"Now don't go spoiling our paradise by borrowing trouble," said Cora, always optimistic. "Maybe the old tenants were obtrusive, perhaps their children were insolent and mischievous, not like our own dear little angel, whom everybody must love. Maybe, too, the old man is ostracized because of ways his neighbors don't understand. Why, Adrian, perhaps we are about to have a special mission to humanize this lonely man."

Little Daisy, wise and observant for her years, listened attentively. In her childish way she seemed to get the idea that they were describing some kind of an untamed ogre. The next morning she astonished her parents with a remark that showed a deep impression on her mind.

"I said 'bless Mr. Price' in my prayers," she announced. "I'm going to, every night. Isn't that right, mamma?"

"Why, surely," announced Mrs. Mills, "what made you think of that, darling?"

"Because, if he is lonely, with no little child to love, I feel sorry for him, and I'm going to be good to him for fear he'll steal my dollar or kill Major."

"We will see that Major doesn't annoy him, dear," said her father.

They moved. Little Daisy had their neighbor on her mind, and when soured Jonas Price was pointed out to her she looked a little awed, but said: "Mamma, he looks as if he was thinking all the time. Maybe it's about his two little dead children."

The next day Mrs. Mills missed Daisy. Seeking her, to her astonishment she observed her neighbor lifting her over the hedge.

"I borrowed your little daughter to show her some early flowers in my hot beds," explained Mr. Price. "Madam, I hope you will allow her to come over and see me once in a while."

"Oh, surely," acceded the delighted Cora.

"Oh, mamma," prattled Daisy later. "I told Mr. Price how I put him in my prayers every night. And he showed me the pictures of his two little girls, and when I kissed him and said I felt sorry for him, he just cried out loud."

It was a few evenings after that Adrian was disturbed by the loud barking of Major. He noticed lights flitting about next door, dressed, thought of burglars, armed himself, and started to investigate just in time to find a man rushing from the back door of the Price home, a valise in his hand. Then as Adrian heard the voice of Price shouting for help he halted the man at the point of his weapon, backed him into the house and found its owner tied to a chair, the victim of a bold robbery. Adrian held the burglar until the police arrived, and learned that but for his timely assistance the marauder would have escaped with valuable bonds and money.

Jonas Price ceased to hate animals after that. The true friendship of the new neighbors caused him to emerge from his shell of surliness and suspicion. Then came the climax in the affairs of the Mills family. Their house caught fire one night and only a part of their furniture was saved. They were invited over to their neighbor's house, for there was not a vacant place they could rent.

"I am going away for my health," said Jonas Price, "and you people had better settle here permanently."

"I don't know what we would have done if your roof had not sheltered us," said Adrian. "If we could remain your tenants for a time—"

Jonas Price fondly kissed Daisy, clasped in his arms. "Tenants," he repeated. "You saved me a fortune, and this little angel has brought the first sunlight of years into my dreary old heart. As to the home here, with the agreement that I can come once in a while and pass a few happy hours with you—I give it to you."

STRANGE CLIENTS

By ALDEN CHAPMAN

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

It was a good deal of satisfaction to Lucius Mangold to reckon up profits and prospects at the end of two years' practice of the law. There had been a progress that was gratifying and encouraging.

"It is a reward for good hard work, faithfulness and self denial," he complimented himself.

Mangold looked up as a step echoed at the office threshold. The doorway framed a modestly dressed young girl of about nineteen. She had a face that showed character and true womanliness. At a glance he noted that her attire, while neat, was somewhat worn. Her gloves were mended and the handbag she carried was old and faded. To his analytical mind here was a young lady of quite superior mold, but with certain traces of care in the shadowed eyes.

"I come as a client," she spoke. "I noticed your name as a lawyer, but I have no money to pay for your services."

"Be seated, please," invited Mangold, settling a chair for this plain speaking visitor, and they faced one another, she slightly embarrassed, he endeavoring to set her at her ease.

"I am Elita Vayre," she spoke, "and need advice. I have to work for a living as a stenographer and live with an invalid aunt. About a month since a firm of lawyers, Parker & Merton, wrote me to call at their office. Do you know the firm?"

Mangold simply nodded. He indeed knew the discredited pettifoggers and nothing good of them, but he did not commit himself verbally.

"They were looking for one Elita Vayre, heiress to a portion of the estate of Robert Vayre, they told me. Was that the name of my uncle? It was, I informed them. The rest was easy, they said. If I would sign a contract awarding them twenty per cent and swear to my identity they would secure for me a legacy of over $10,000. I was quite stunned at the proposal, but I did not like the secret, sinister way of those two men. I asked time to think it over. I have come to you."

"To see that your rights are conserved? Yes," submitted Mangold.

"No, for I have no rights at all in the matter," was the amazing reply. "For I am not the rightful Elita Vayre, and I believe they know it. By accident I noticed among some notations they had that their Robert Vayre died two years ago. My uncle has been dead five years."

The wonderment and interest of Lucius Mangold were alike aroused. "And then," he hurriedly went on his fair client, "there came to me a singular suggestion of memory. A year since, when I was living at Columbus I incidentally heard of a young lady working in the same building where I did whose name was the same as mine. I can give her address of that period. The surname is not a common one. I believe that she is the rightful heiress of the rightful Robert Vayre, and I wish you would ascertain if this is not true. She was a poor girl like myself, and the legacy would probably mean great joy and happiness for her."

The nobility in the mind of this conscientious, unselfish girl awoke the deepest respect and admiration in the mind of Mangold. He showed it so clearly in his face that his caller flushed.

"Please tell me further details if you can," he suggested. "Your address, and I will let you know the result of my investigation in a few days."

Mangold wrote at once to the Miss Vayre at Columbus. Four days later an animated, buoyant young lady called in person, announcing herself as the recipient of his letter.

"I can scarcely realize that I am the person you have described," she said, "but my uncle was Robert Vayre and I can establish other points of which you advised me."

Within two days Mangold fully established the fact that his present client was the real heiress to the Vayre legacy, but he did not work through Parker & Merton, but with the administrator of the Vayre estate, and his vivacious and delighted client lasted that she who bore the same name should be sent for at once.

Mangold's first client happened to come to the office when he and her double as to name were conversing pleasantly, and the picture of a young girl of means and an attractive young man, seemed to cause the visitor to contrast her own forlorn condition depressingly.

"You dear, sweet friend," spoke the heiress warmly, "do you comprehend what you have done for me? I have just told Mr. Mangold that you shall have a generous recognition of your thoughtfulness."

"Thank you," spoke the other distantly, "I could accept none."

"Oh, but you must! Think of it! Now Burney Rolfe and I can marry! Oh! such a happy fortune, and you must share it."

Instantly the dulled face of Mangold's first client unclouded. The young lawyer possessed a new thought that gave him comfort. Was it because she was relieved at the discovery that her double already had a fiancé that she at once grew more gracious?

He surmised it and his first impression of something more than friendly esteem for his first client quickened into a deeper sentiment that the future developed into love.

A VITAL MOMENT

By T. B. ALDERSON

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

He was not the man I was after, yet I experienced a glow of satisfaction as my eyes fell upon him. It was in a slip of the San Francisco harbor, and he was working about the deck of a trim little schooner, bearing the name "Neptune." The man I had been seeking for the detective agency with which I was connected was Lyman Britt, a notorious criminal. The man before me I recognized as his close friend, Martin Brierly.

I did not think he noticed me as I strolled towards the craft, but he had shrewd, alert character that he was, as I was to learn to my cost later. It chanced that I was acquainted with the captain of the Neptune. I went aboard, but Captain Moultrie was absent until noon. I returned to the Neptune about noon. The captain was there, received me cordially and I asked about Brierly.

"You call him Brierly," he said. "We know him as Matson, assistant to the cook. But he gave up his job two hours ago. Said a dying relative had sent for him. Paid him off, and that's all."

I doubted not now that Brierly had recognized me and had been scared away by my appearance. I wondered at his being in the humble employment of a cook, for he was not given to hard work. As an expert coiner he had always been able to secure plenty of money.

"We are to carry to the island of Baranta, in the South Pacific, a new coinage for its king, amounting to something over a million," Captain Moultrie told me. "It has been heads and shells for current money there heretofore. The coin is a thin silver one of small denomination, and while they have no metals at Baranta they have plenty of diamonds, and we are to deliver the boxes of coins and receive back for The Goldsmith Company the pay in the sparklers."

Although the suspicion that Brierly was up to something was strong in my mind, I could not connect him up in a tangible way with the same. I was considerably put out, however, in losing sight of a man who in time might aid me in finding Lyman Britt. I was gratified the following day to run across Brierly entering a drinking place. I had assumed a disguise and felt safe in mixing in with the crowd, keeping a close eye upon him.

When he left the place I shadowed him cautiously. He took a roundabout course to the waterside and went aboard a trim little craft there. I hung about the dock and observed two men finally leave the vessel. They passed me without paying any particular attention to me, but, turning quickly, knocked me senseless.

I awoke a close prisoner in a room in the hold. The craft was afloat. Water and food were brought to me for ten days. I was fed, but left to my own devices. One night I heard voices beyond my prison door. They belonged to Britt and Brierly and I was fully enlightened as to their purposes from what I caught of their conversation.

It seemed that Brierly had been a spy aboard of the Neptune to learn the details of the coin shipment. He and his confederates saw a clever opportunity to profit by what he had learned. Expert coiners that they were, they had duplicated the ordered coinage, except that they had employed a cheap baser metal, and with it boxed in their hold were on their way to get first to Baranta, impose themselves as agents of The Goldsmith Company upon its king, receive their pay, divide, and disappear. There was not the slightest prospect of escape for me. For five weeks I was kept a close prisoner. I could trace the arrival of the craft at Baranta, the unloading, a departure, and one morning was apprized by the overhead talk of two of the crew in the hold that we were at anchor at Proda, a town on the Chilean coast. The men were under the influence of liquor and one of them, unlocking the doors of several below-deck apartments, by mistake turned a key in the door of my own.

I waited until they had disappeared, and then stole forth. After some cautious wanderings finding myself at an entrance of the cabin. There, regaling themselves with liquor and gloat-ing over a snakeskin bag before them which held the diamonds paid for the coins, they discussed glowingly a future of opulence.

I acted on a wild impulse, I hardly knew how quickly and well, until I had sprung between them, snatched up the precious treasure, was on deck, then ashore, then making for the business part of the town. I was pursued, but I ran like a deer. A sign showed me the official police office of the town. I dashed in breathlessly, told my story, saw the snakeskin deposited in a safe, several officers sent out to apprehend my recent captors, and—collapsed.

Three rewards came to me from my adventure. One was for Lyman Britt, badly wanted, a second from The Goldsmith Company for saving them a large loss, the third—

A wife, Margaret, to whom I had been engaged for a year, and whom now I was able to present with the home we had so planned for.

Poor Approach.

"If I ask you to marry me, I s'pose you'll say no."

"I will if you make your approach in that feeble way. That ain't salesmanship, George."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A DIAMOND IN THE ROUGH

By CECILLE LANGDON

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

It was not a very pretentious room that Norma Ellis occupied, but its rent was low and there was a sense of protection in having Mrs. Judy Porter for a landlady. Then, too, there was her twelve-year-old son, Jerry, always in mischief, but amenable to the pleasant ways of Norma, who believed there was lots of good in him.

For five years Norma had been an orphan. She had secured a position as a typist at a very moderate salary. Another employee had told her of Mrs. Porter, who rented out rooms to an entirely respectable class, and something motherly in the manner of the hard-working landlady had attracted Norma. The interest became quite mutual, and very often Mrs. Porter invited Norma to tea to talk over her manifold troubles, finding a sympathetic listener.

The main complaint of the distressed mother was Jerry, "in hot water all the time!" He was a natural born fighter, and came home at least once a week with a bruised lip or a blackened eye. He annoyed many of the roomers whom he disliked with his elfish tricks, was sent home permanently from school, and this led Norma to taking up his education. He would study for her, and she devoted her evenings to giving him instruction.

"You look, tired, dear, and, excuse me, but sad, too," remarked Mrs. Porter, after noting a certain depression in her favorite roomer.

"Yes, there is a rush of work at the office just now," evasively explained Norma.

There had been at the office a young man named Roscoe Burt who had shown her some pleasing attentions, and she treasured the same. They had become very friendly and he had said:

"They are sending me on the road, Miss Ellis, and if I make good it will probably place me in a position where I may want to say to you what I would not until sure of a business future."

Just then some friends approached and he half whispered to Norma:

"If I write to you, you will not deem me presumptuous, and will reply?"

"Yes," she assented, and flushed and trembled, as was natural with a girl feeling that her first love was about to culminate.

A week went by, and there was no word from the young man. Norma genuinely sorrowed.

Norma took up her cross and tried to be cheerful and happy. Mrs. Porter was going away to visit a sister, and Norma was glad to keep melancholy thoughts at bay by occupying her spare evenings in helping to arrange her landlady's wardrobe.

"I have a friend who will take charge of the rooms while I am gone," she told Norma, "but Jerry I leave entirely in your care."

"I shall be glad," said Norma sincerely. "It will keep me from being lonely. He will behave himself splendidly while you are gone, won't you, Jerry?"

"I've got to if I keep my promise to you, Miss Ellis," declared the lad seriously. "I'm not going to miss being educated, when you tell me that within a year you will have me trained so I can run a typewriter and get a good job as a clerk," and he kept off the streets, studied his lessons conscientiously, and at the end of the week Norma said:

"Now, Jerry, we've worked hard and will enjoy a little pleasure. There is a fine movie down at the Orpheum. There is my pocketbook. Please pay for the tickets. And we must have some soda after the entertainment."

"All right, and some of these fine days when I get working I'll pay you back by taking you to a swell opera." They had a very enjoyable time, and Norma was quite proud of her well-behaved escort. He bade her good night as she reached her room.

"Oh, Jerry!" she called down the stairs after him as she opened her pocketbook, "the key to my room—it is gone."

"Then I must have lost it," Jerry chided himself. "Say, I'm awful sorry. Look here," and he returned to her side. "It's a catch lock, isn't it? All right, I'll just climb through the transom and unlatch it. Mrs. Willis has gone to bed, but I'll let you in here and bring a duplicate key first thing in the morning."

The transom had been always kept open for ventilation and Jerry was soon on the other side, released the lock, and departed. As Norma turned on the gas she noticed lying upon the carpet an envelope. It was slightly creased and soiled, brushed by the body of Jerry as he crowded through the space overhead. It was clearly discernible to Norma that it had been brought by the postman when she was away, who had sought to fling it through the transom, but it had caught on the ledge and had been dislodged by Jerry in his descent.

It was postmarked three weeks previous. She opened it, unfamiliar with the handwriting. Her color rose, her pulses fluttered as she read the signature: "Roscoe Burt."

In the body of the missive was the expressed hope of the writer that when he returned she would consent to become his wife.

Blessed Jerry! Rough-and-tumble Jerry! What sunlight and joy he had unconsciously brought into her lonely life!

JUST WRITE TO YOUR RATS

Strangest Among the Many Remedies Recommended for Exterminating the Pest.

Rats are a great plague, and just now we are suffering from them to an unusual degree. They are difficult, indeed, to get rid of.

Poison has its disadvantages, observes a writer in London Answers. A large monastery near Budapest once had to be deserted for months because a rat catcher had poisoned all the rats, and the stench of the dead bodies was intolerable. The best rat is said to be a barrel half full of water, the top covered in, and provided with a trap door that shuts itself again as soon as a rat has fallen through. (This door should be fastened and the trap well baited for several nights before catching actually begins.)

To drive rats out of a place, as apart from destroying them, several plans have been tried. One is to blow a bugle often and loudly in the places they are in the habit of frequenting. Another is to catch a rat alive, tar him all over, or hang a small bell around his neck and let him loose again; it is said that this will frighten his brethren out of the place. The most curious way of getting rid of rats perhaps is the old plan of writing them a letter, which must be in rhyme, warning them to go and placing it in their hands.

The present writer has heard of a case when this is said to have proved successful.

STOPPED TO GREET TEACHER

Of Course General Pershing Had to See Who This Was, From His Home Town.

Miss Lois Tracy, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Tracy of Anderson, former residents of Laclede, Mo., the boyhood home of Gen. John Pershing, is teaching school at Seattle, Wash. During the recent visit of General Pershing to Seattle pupils of Miss Tracy prepared a banner and placed it in front of their school building for the notice of General Pershing, who was to pass that building. The quick eye of the general caught the banner, reading, "Our Teacher Is From Your Home Town."

The general stopped his automobile and the pupils cheered.

"Where's the teacher?" inquired General Pershing.

Miss Tracy appeared, shook hands with General Pershing, who recalled her father as one of his schoolmates, and after a three-minute conversation drove on.

The American Boy. Seven-year-old Joseph McKee of Vigo county has begun to have some doubts as to the existence of a Santa Claus. So on Christmas eve he announced his intention of sitting up and watching for him. When told that if he were seen Santa would leave him anything, he declared that he would hide. "But he would see that there was no one in your bed," protested his mother. "and then he would think there wasn't any boy here and take your things on to some other little boy."

For a few minutes he sat thinking. Then a queer little smile came on to his face. "Mother," he asked happily, "can't I make a dummy and put it in my bed, and then hide behind the davenport in the living room to watch?"

SURELY MAN'S GOLDEN AGE

As W. D. Howells Writes of It, the Best Years Are Between Fifty and Sixty.

After 61 one must not take too many chances with oneself, but I should say that the golden age of man is between 50 and 60, when one may safely take them. One has peace then from the different passions; if one has been tolerably industrious one is tolerably prosperous; one has fairly learned one's trade or has mastered one's art; age seems as far off as youth; one is not so much afraid of death as earlier; one likes joking as much as ever and loves beauty and truth as much; family cares are well out of the way; if one has married timely one no longer nightly walks the floor with even the youngest child; the marriage ring is then a circle half rounded in eternity. It is a blessed time; it is, indeed, the golden age, and no age after it is more than silver. writes W. D. Howells in Harper's.

The best age after it may be that between 80 and 90, but one cannot make so sure of 90 as of 70 in the procession of years, and that is where the gold turns silver. But silver is one of the precious metals, too, and it need not have any alloy of the baser ones. I do not say how it will be in the years between 90 and 100. I am not yet confronted with that question. Still, all is not gold between 80 and 90, as it is between 50 and 60.

In that time, if one has made oneself wanted in the world, one is still wanted; but between 80 and 90, if one is still wanted, is one wanted as much as ever? It is a painful question, but one must not shirk it, and in trying for the answer one must not do less than one's utmost, at a time when one's utmost will cost more effort than before. This is a disadvantage of living so long, but we cannot change the conditioning if we wish to live.

There is always the question whether one does wish to live, but for the average happy or unhappy man, I should say yes, yes, yes. We would ignore the fact that there are some men so unhappy beyond the vast average that they cannot wish to live. These kill themselves but, speaking without statistics, I do not believe these are often people of 80 and after. Apparently life is seldom so unbearable with those that one almost never hears of their suicide.

"Had To Get Help Quick," He Says

TANLAC PROVED TO BE THE THING I NEEDED AND I COULDN'T ASK FOR BETTER HEALTH, NOW."

"By the help of Tanlac, I have regained my lost health, and today I am in as good condition physically as anyone could wish to be," said Wade Hummer, 302 East Wegger street, South Bend, Indiana.

"About the time I was sixteen years old, twenty-one years ago," he continued, "I had an attack of measles, and since that time my kidneys have worried me a great deal. Now and then or all these years I have suffered with a dull pain across the small of my back and in my hips. If I did any heavy lifting or strained myself in any way, the pain would get so bad I could hardly stand it. I kept getting worse until last spring I began suffering terribly with severe shooting pains up and down my sides and back, through my shoulders and all across my hips. Then, too, there was always a heavy feeling like lead in the pit of my stomach, my liver seemed to be sluggish, and I always had a bad taste in my mouth. I was badly constipated, had severe throbbing headaches and often became so dizzy I could hardly stand up, in fact I was in misery all the time, day and night, and could not do anything like as much work as I had formerly been able to do.

"Finally I got in such bad fix I had to get something to help me mighty quick or get flat of my back in bed. I had heard so much about Tanlac I decided to try it and it turned out to be the very thing I needed. I had taken only a few doses when I commenced to get better, and in a short while, I was free of all pain and my stomach and liver were in good condition, and I have been in the best of health ever since. Tanlac is certainly a grand medicine, and through the benefits I have received from it I am working every day without a particle of trouble, while before taking it I just had to force myself to work. I will always have a good word for Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold in Greencastle by R. E. Mullins, A. R. York—Cloverdale and George Fox—Reelsville
