NOTICE.

Whereas my wife Mary has been enticed from my bed and board by the artifice and persuasion of designing and meddling persons, and without any just cause or provocation—this a painful and unavoidable step must be resorted to, hereby forbidding all persons from harboring or crediting her on my account, and also to invite her to return to the bosom of affection of her husband, who is willing to forget and to forgive; for he verily believes, that, had she been left to the free exercise of her own opinion, this unpleasant separation never would have happened.

W. M. W. LOVE.

Charlestown, Jan. 1, 1822.

REPLICATION.

WM. LOVE—I take notice that you have advertised me for leaving your bed and board without any just cause or provocation. As for your bed you have not got any, for it was sold to pay your debts; neither was your boarding much; and as for the just cause, I think I had a very good one, when you drew a razor across my throat three times, and swore by your Maker that you would cut it.—As for any body harboring me, I am on a visit at my father's house, and I intend it shall be a long visit. As for running you in debt, I cannot; for you cannot be trusted for six and a fourth cents in Charlestown.

MARY LOVE.

APPEAL

TO THE CITIZENS OF CHARLESTOWN.

Gentlemen and Fellow Citizens—

I am an utter me to address you on the present subject. I have been a citizen of your corporation nearly two years:—Through much tribulation and affliction of body and mind, you know, fellow citizens, the opposition I have met with from my first coming into Charlestown, which was the cause of my forsaking the paths of piety: The demon of hell began to prey upon my mind, which led me further and further into vice, until the present period—and every endeavor of designing and unfeeling persons in persuading my companion against me, which is one of the most unwarrantable acts that comes under the name of the law! It is unwarranted by the laws of the United States, the laws of nature and the laws of God! It is murder in the highest degree! What is man's life to him bereaved of his bosom friend that he has confided in, and who has been turned against him by unfeeling wretches, given up to float on the tide of dissipation? Now, Gentlemen and Ladies, if this be proved to you here I take my stand, and I say, under no earthly circumstance, can a justification of the seducers be adduced, no matter with what delinquent sophistry they may blaspheme. God had ordained nature had cemented our happiness and consecrated the celestial matrimonial union between us, and it is complicated treason against God, against man, and against society to justify its violation. The social compact, through every fibre, trembles at its consequence! Not only policy but law—not only law, but nature—not only nature, but religion denounce it: Parent and offspring, youth and middle aged, the dead from the tombs, the child from the cradle, creatures scarce alive, and creatures yet unborn, the giants shivering on the verge of death, with one assent re-echo God's curse on such separators—peradventure them whom the Lord hath joined together.

How often has the tenderness of that seduced companion induced her to fly with her arms around my neck, and exclaim, "how can I bear the thoughts of being separated from you" with tears gushing in floods on my breast, struggling between affection and the persuasion of unfeeling monsters, premeditating the ruin of an unguarded youth. Oh! virtuous and pious citizens of Charlestown, rise from your lounges! array yourselves against such principles! There are many of you grieved on my mind, and will be dear to me as long as I have a mind, and when my eyes are about to be closed, I will sigh, and wish, and pray for your happiness. Some have been the fathers and mothers of my life; or when I was a stranger they took me in, when I was hungry they gave me meat, when I was sick they visited me.

Gentlemen and fellow citizens, it is with some of you to say whether the replication signed Mary Love is false and ungrounded, as far as my preparation and industry went to provide for her, and whether my dealings with all men was not upright, as far as I was able in all my embarrassments, and whether my credit is not good for six and a fourth cents in Charlestown.—Although I believe that that replication was not my wife's dictation, but her base seducer's, and had they been publishing a catalogue of their own bad acts, they might have adopted the aforesaid replication without any fear of publishing falsehoods. Gentlemen and fellow citizens, I am not fond of paper war, nor law suits; but knowing that law is fixed on the basis of justice (and justice is all that I want) and if justice can say on a proper investigation, that I am robbed of my companion, and her murdered in the estimation of all pious persons, then let us, under that pious cloak, separate all many husbands and wives as we can make them violate their promises before God, and let us unshackle our swords, and avenge ourselves of our wrongs by spilling the blood of the aggressors, and say that justice, piecy no law does not forbid such outrages, which are equally as justifiable as the case of the separation of me and my companion, and the assertion that she is only on a visit, which must certainly be a very long visit, of no less than three months duration, already.—As painful as the thing has been to me, I have never resorted to any harsh means, nor have I exclaimed against her in any way. Adieu.

W. M. W. LOVE.
