MAJORITY OF VOTERS "WET," SPEAKER SAYS

Personal Liberty League Declares for Beer—Newspaper in the Field.

Saying that a majority of the people of the United States are opposed to prohibition, C. Homer Durand, president of the Personal Liberty League of Ohio, addressed a meeting at Tomlinson hall Wednesday night under the auspices of the Indiana Personal Liberty League, organization bearing to do all in their power to bring about a modification of the law.

The speaker quoted from the Bible, saying that the principles advocated in the Bible are for temperance, but was not for prohibition. He cited passages to show that wine was used by Biblical characters and he asserted that the advocates of prohibition today are trying to suppress the teaching of the Bible in forcing a "dry" nation on the people. He said the voices of the people have been heard in the congress because the cities are not represented in the congress as the rural districts are. He said the national initiative and referendum will result if the congress does not heed the voice of the majority crying out against the prohibition that was forced on them.

Mr. Durand remarked that he had observed in the few hours he was in Indianapolis that the prohibition movement had a lead in it here, for he said, it was evident all the drunk had not been eliminated.

John M. Redemacher, president of the Indiana Personal Liberty League, presided at the meeting, asserting that the majority of the people are in favor of a proper supervision of the sales of intoxicants but they are opposed to a forced prohibition.

J. Edward Krause, proprietor of the Hotel Washington spoke briefly. He again urged the publication of a "wet" newspaper under the auspices of the Personal Liberty League in Indianapolis and urged his friends to do all in their power to help the cause along.

Copies of the first edition of the newspaper, The Desert News, were passed in the audience.

Only 4% is fit for Enterprise

This year's hard winter wheat crop is like stage scenery—not what it seems. The grain looks fine and there's lots of it, but it's weak.

Instead of being solid and full of gluten, it is puffed up with starch and water. Plenty of moisture and warm weather made it outgrow its strength.

In a few localities this was not the case. The soil was drier and the wheat developed more slowly into thinner, harder grain, full of gluten.

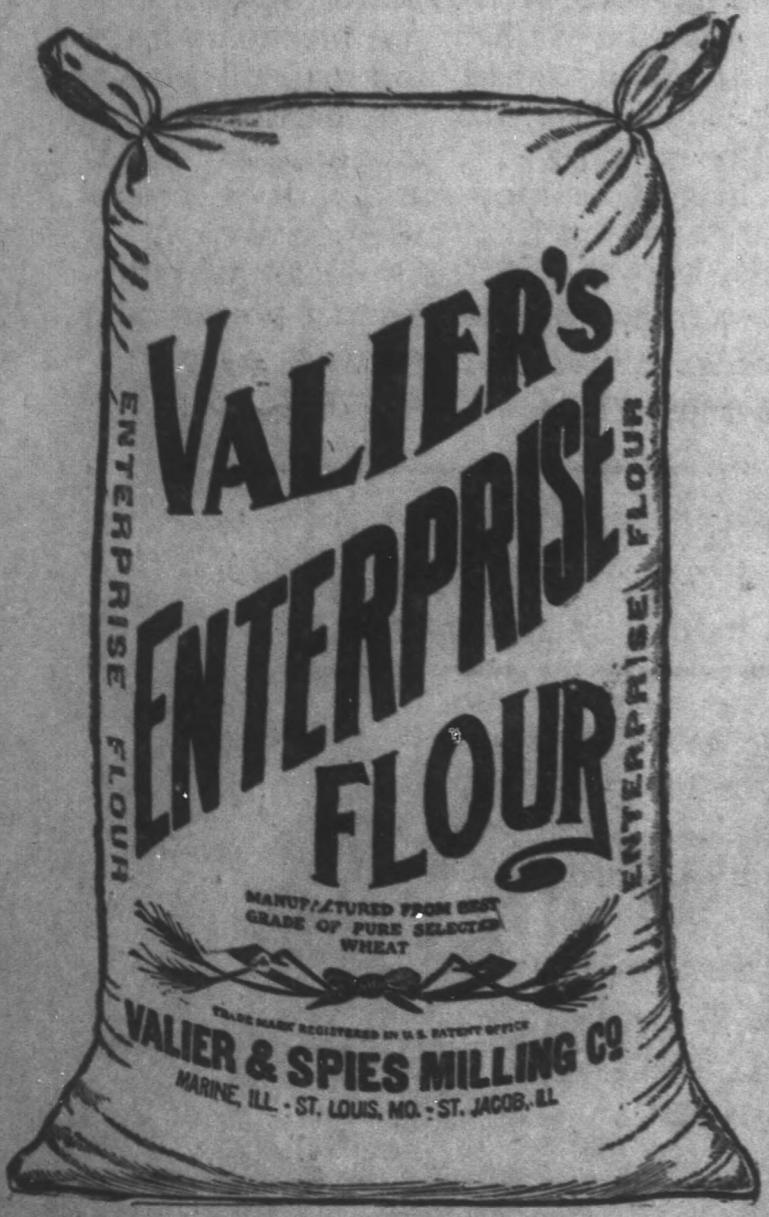

We have to have such grain or we can't mill Enterprise Flour. Its strength is necessary to produce the fine baking results that you expect of Enterprise.

There was only four per cent of strong, glutinous wheat in the whole crop and we had to pay the highest premium we have ever paid for every bushel we bought. But we have the satisfaction of knowing that at least you, who use Enterprise Flour, will not have trouble with your baking this year.

Enterprise costs more, as you'd expect—it's worth more. It will give you better, more uniform bakings and more of them per sack. The wisdom and economy of paying for quality in flour has never been so apparent as it will be this year.

The Common Fault With Most Cooks is to Use Too Much Shortening

ONE of the most embarrassing things for a housewife is to have her cake turn out "heavy"—or her pie crust "soggy." Not only unsatisfactory to the palate but the cause of many people saying: "Pies give me indigestion"—or "I can't eat pastry."

Yet this is a condition easily avoided.

Don't use too much shortening.

You use $\frac{1}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ less Mazola than you need of either butter or lard—with better results.

If it's pie, Mazola will make the finest, most delicate and easily digested crust you ever tasted.

Or if it's cake—both lightness and richness will result from using Mazola.

And being an oil it is always ready for instant use—no tiresome "creaming-in."

This is because Mazola is an absolutely pure vegetable fat from an edible source. It is 100% fat—contains no moisture as is contained in butter and lard.

Once you try Mazola you will prefer it to lard and other shortenings.
