Mrs. Celia M. Stewart of Indianapolis, Ind., wife of the advertising manager of the Indianapolis Freeman, spent the summer at Washington as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Freeman H. M. Murry of Alexandria, Va. She made a host of friends during her all-too-brief stay, and no visitor from the Middle West has been shown a larger degree of social attention than that bestowed upon this handsome and accomplished young matron from the Hoosier capital. Receptions, dinners, luncheons, card parties, drives and river excursions were given in her honor, and Washington and the historic city of Alexandria vied in worshipping at her shrine. After seeing all the sights in and about the nation's capital, Mrs. Stewart went to Philadelphia to witness the ceremonies of Founders' Day, and left later for her home in Indianapolis. She spent several very pleasant days in Baltimore, attending the convention of the National Negro Business League. Mrs. Stewart was accompanied east by her bright little son, Master Charles Glenn Stewart.
