

POETRY.

"Come Inspiration from thy hermit seat,
By mortals seldom found."

LORD BYRON.

The following (says the Boston Spectator) is the last poetical effusion of Lord Byron, from a late number of Blackwood's Magazine. The poetry is worth preserving.

Nat. Standard.

'Tis time this heart should be unmoved,
Since others it hath ceased to move;
Yet though I cannot be beloved,
Still let me love!

The fire that on my bosom preys
Is lone as some volcanic isle;
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile!

The hope, the fear, the jealous care,
The exalted portion of the pain,
And power of love, I cannot share
But wear the chain.

But 'tis not thus—and 'tis not here
Such thoughts should shake my soul, nor note
Where glory decks the hero's bier,
Or binds his brow.

The sword, the banner, and the field,
Glory and Greece, around me see!
The Spartan borne upon his shield,
Was not more free.

Awake! (not Greece—she is awake!)
Awake, my spirit! think through whom
Thy life blood tracts its parent lake,
And then strike home!

Tread those reviving passions down,
Unworthy manhood; unto thee
Indifferent should the smile or frown
Of beauty be

If thou regret's thy youth, why live?
The land of honorable death
Is here:—up to the field and give
Away thy breath!

Seek out—less often sought than found,
A soldier's grave—for thee the best;
Then look around and choose thy ground,
And take thy rest.

MISCELLANY.

From the New York Mirror.
DOMESTIC HAPPINESS.

Providence, for some wise purpose, has ordained that the journey of man from the cradle to the grave, should be variegated with scenes of pleasure and misery.—Sometimes he is gliding smoothly and quietly down the stream of time, wafted by the breezes of health and prosperity. Then he is tossed upon the tempestuous sea of sickness and adversity, and his fragile bark, wrecked by disease, is either buried in the ocean of death, or is so dismantled, that it glides down the current of life, without canvass or helm, the sport of the winds and waves, and a sure prey of every tempestuous gale.—In this checkered map of the journey of life, there is no part of it, upon which man can dwell with more pleasure, than that which springs from domestic relations.

The ambitious despot may wave his bloody sceptre over kingdoms and empires. Nations may rise and fall at his nod.—He may look upon this globe as only the theatre upon which to display his military achievements; yet he does not enjoy pure and substantial happiness.—He only drinks at corrupt and stagnant pools, which will not satisfy his feverish appetite.

The statesman, by many a toilsome day, and sleepless night, may elevate himself to the highest pinnacle of fame and renown; yet his ambitious desires are not satisfied, and misery and disappointment are his constant attendants. The scholar may climb the rugged and steep hill of science, grasping every bush of learning and taste, plucking every flower of genius and poetry, cul-ling all the sweets in nature's garden, and after toiling for years, he looks forward and exclaims, O the height and length, the breadth and depth of the study of nature!—Life is too short to accomplish my object!—The politician may climb the slippery ladder of popularity, until he becomes giddy; he then loses his hold, and is dashed headlong down, and exclaims with cardinal Wolsey, "How poor are they who hang upon princes' favors."

The miser may by toiling and fasting fill his coffers with filthy lucre; still he is not satisfied, and the wretched man goes down to the hungry grave, and would, if he could, drag his ponderous boxes with him. The man of pleasure, like the butterfly, goes from flower to flower, and from clime to clime, and extracts sweets from every blossom of nature, and every nosegay of art; and yet he exclaims with Solomon, "all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

The solitary old bachelor, and the misanthrope, may stalk through the world, and boast of their independence, and exclaim against the social affections, and kindred relations, and say to themselves, that I have no wife or children to mourn my departure thence; yet they are miserable and unhappy, and at the close of life, appear like some solitary, dry, and withered hemlock, without leaf or limbs, upon some barren heath.

But not so with the man of family, kindred, and friends. He is continually cheered and encouraged through life. He observes with pleasant sensations his family around him. He looks forward with joy and satisfaction, to those changes and connexions in life, which add link after link to the chain of his domestic felicity. If the bleak winds of adversity beat upon him, or the cold pinching frost of poverty overtake him, he seeks happiness, and finds it in the bosom of his family and friends.

If pale haggard disease should meet him, and pull him down upon a bed of sickness and languishing, the partner of his bosom, like a ministering angel, anxiously watches over his pillow, trims the midnight lamp, and with great solicitude observes every step of the disease, and with eyes beaming with affection, stretches forth her hand to alleviate his pain.

In the domestic circle you may find pure and refined happiness. There, every contending and boisterous passion is hushed. There, envy with her poisonous and corroding tooth dare not enter. Slander, "whose breath rides in the posting winds," is shut out. Malice, whose appetite is as keen as death, gnaws in vain for admittance. And revenge, who thirsts after blood, gnashes his teeth in despair.

It is in the domestic circle that the worst passions of man are curbed and subdued.—There, the rough appetites of our natures are polished and refined.—There, the social faculties are cultivated and matured.—Ties of the most tender and endearing nature are engendered and nursed. Without kindred and friends, this world, so beautifully clothed and adorned, so lavishly covered by every thing pleasant to the taste, and pleasing to the eye; and hung with such a rich canopy, would be but a dreary and desolate abode.

If the social affections and domestic virtues were driven from the world, it would present an awful and appalling picture of depravity and vice.

KAPPA.

The following anecdote is interesting, as exemplifying the entire submission paid by the Turks to their superiors.

At the commencement of the troubles in Constantinople, a Greek was arrested during the night by the guard, and conducted to a dungeon in the old castle at Smyrna. He at once prepared for death, which he looked upon as inevitable, when the Boulouk Bachi said to him, "strangle those eleven criminals!" The Greek was horrified at the command, which, however, he prepared to execute. On arriving at the fifth victim, he was nearly overcome by his feelings, and appeared to sink under them, when a soldier who observed him, struck him with his staff, crying out, "Wretch, do thy duty." "Wretch thyself," retorted the Turkish officer, offended at this assumption of superiority; "is it not enough that a man is obliged to perform such an office, without being ill treated for it? yield thy neck and die."—The Turk obeyed, and the Greek was obliged to strangle him.

A clergyman once travelling in a stage coach, was abruptly asked by one of the passengers, if any of the heathens would go to heaven: "Sir, answered the clergyman, I am not appointed judge of the world, and consequently I cannot tell; but if ever you go to heaven, you shall either find some of them there, or a good reason why they are not there."

La Mott's Cough Drops.

IMPORTANT MEDICINE FOR COUGHS AND CONSUMPTIONS.

THIS Elixir is not offered to the public as infallible, and a rival to all others, but as possessing virtues peculiarly adapted to the present prevailing disorders of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption. A timely use of these Drops may be considered a certain cure in most cases of Common Colds, Coughs, Influenza, Whooping-Cough, Pain in the Side, Difficulty of Breathing, Want of Sleep arising from debility; and in Spasmodic Asthma it is singularly efficacious. A particular attention to the directions accompanying each bottle is necessary.

The following certificates from respectable gentlemen, physicians and surgeons, are subjoined, to show that this composition is one which enlightened men are disposed to regard as efficacious and worthy of public patronage.

Having examined the composition of Mr. Crosby's improvement upon La Mott's Cough Drops, we have no hesitation in recommending them to the public, as being well adapted to those cases of disease for which he recommends it.

Doct's JONATHAN DORR, dated Albany, December 4th, 1824; JAMES POST, of White-creek, February 14th, 1825; WATSON SUMNER and JOHN WEBB, M. D. of Cambridge, Feb. 20th, 1825; SOLOMON DEAN, of Jackson, January 10th, 1825.

Mr. A. Crosby—I am pleased with this opportunity of relating a few facts, which may serve in commendation of your excellent Cough-Drops. For ten years I was afflicted with a pulmonary complaint; my cough was severe, my appetite weak, and my strength failing I used many popular medicines, but only found temporary relief, until by a continued use of your valuable drops, I have been blessed with such perfect health as to render further means unnecessary. Rev. EBENEZER HARRIS.

Salem, (N. Y.) January 12th, 1825.

Prepared by A. Crosby, sole proprietor, Cambridge, (N. Y.) whose signature will be affixed in his own hand writing to each bill of directions. Be particular that each bottle is enveloped in a stereo or check label, which is struck on the same bill with the directions.

Sold wholesale and retail, by Dr. G. Dawson, Pittsburgh—J. Crambecker, Wheeling—E. H. Weddell, Druggists Cleveland—Pratt and Meach, Druggists Buffalo—O. & S. Crosby, Druggists Columbus—Goodwin, Ashton & Co., M. Woolf & Co., and A. Fairchilds, Druggists Cincinnati.

AUGUSTA COLLEGE.

At the instance of the board of Trustees of the Augusta College, the following communication is made. Augusta College is situated on the Ohio river, 45 miles above Cincinnati, in the beautiful and very healthy village of Augusta.—The building is a fine brick, seventy-six feet in front, forty feet deep, and two stories and a half high, and is now completely finished, and the institution is out of debt in every respect. Two professors have been appointed, Rev. Joseph Tomlinson, prof. of Mathematics, and Rev. John P. Durbin, prof. of Languages. Mr. Tomlinson is now in the College, and Mr. Durbin is appointed to raise collections for the college, during this session, which will end on the tenth day of August, 1826; during which time a gentleman of known literary attainments is provided to fill up his lack of service, as assistant to Mr. Tomlinson. There are now twenty-three classical students, and increasing weekly; there are near fifty in the English department, who are taught by Mr. Ingram, with great satisfaction. Boarding can be had on the following terms, in good families:—Boarding alone, one dollar per week—boarding, lodging, and washing, one dollar and twenty five cents.—boarding, lodging, washing, room for study, morning and evening, fire and candles, all for one dollar and fifty cents. Tuition, twelve dollars per annum. The by-laws provide that the morals of the students shall be particularly attended to. This College was commenced four or five years since, under the patronage of the Kentucky and Ohio Conferences of the Methodist Church, and is intended to be under the general control of the Methodist church. From this circumstance some have supposed that it was in some sense, to be a theological school. It is only necessary to say that this is an erroneous opinion and without foundation. The object of the school is to afford a purely literary education, principally to the children of our people, but to all others also, (and with precisely the same advantages as the children of Methodist parents,) who may wish to commit their sons to the care of the above institution. We think that the best way is (and what every parent ought to do if possible,) to give our sons a liberal education in early life, and afterwards they can choose their occupation, and whatever it may be, learning will be to them a powerful assistant.
