

MISCELLANY.

From the Rochester Daily Telegraph
"We call back, maid of Lutha years that have rolled away."—OSSTAN

YES, I remember her; I saw her first In the sweet prime of womanhood—the rose Of health, in young and dewy freshness, bloomed
Upon her cheek; and from her dark blue eye
The spirit of each new-born thought looked out In undisguised expression, and diffused Over her face its own pure loveliness!
Oh, she was one of those for whom earth seemed

Ever in summer beauty—flinty brows Melted to smiles, and hearts unwont to feel, Softened to tenderness! Where'er she moved Each eye looked gladness, and each voice In its best tones, spoke welcome; and the world Was proud of her. Yes, she, so loved, caressed, And followed, was all meekness—her whole heart

A deep, pure fount of blessing—such she was!

A change came o'er her: the fell, blasting breath
Of slander, like the Siroc, passed. Etc yet The sun had kissed away its dew, we saw The loveliest flower morn ever smiled on, droop.

Sorrow was wasting fast the springs of life.
She was alone—pale, pale, but lovely still.
Friends who had looked but to her slightest smile

For happiness, had long forsaken her!
It was a summer's eve—the sun had sunk Down from a golden sky, whence brightly streamed.

Far over wood and field, a saffron light, That rested like a lovely dream, on all The gilded landscape: the sweet breath of flowers

Came on the silent air, stealing the soul Like angel harpings heard in Eden's bower, Or airs of heaven, commissioned off to soothe The mortal anguish of the dying saint!
She looked with a mild sadness on the scene Fading like her—"And I had hoped," she said, "My evening sun would set in its full time, Like this!" Oh world, thy visitings of scorn Are fearful to the young and innocent heart, She sank beneath them—and the pitying earth Whose gentle bosom never spurned a child Of sorrow, nor received a lover's guest, Hath decked her grave with freshest green and flowers.

From the Farmers' Advocate.
OLD WYOMING.

Mr. Seward—I have seen in a late paper of yours an account of the destruction of Wyoming, taken from a Philadelphia paper, which is very erroneous. I lived at Wyoming at the time, and many years afterwards, and was well acquainted with nearly all that escaped, and many that were slain. I was at Lackawaxen at the time of the battle, but having conversed with most of those that escaped, can give a pretty correct account of the battle, with the circumstances which led to it.

As to the two Col. Butlers that commanded the opposite troops. I am persuaded they were not cousins. The Wyoming troops were not decayed out, as represented, but went out with the express purpose of attacking the British and Indian army. The Indian army came into a settlement on the river about 15 miles above Kingston or Fort Fort, and killed several people. The alarm was given, and on Wednesday the Wyoming people went up to where the people were killed, and found a few Indians, one of whom they shot. At that time the Indian army had gone back on the mountains, for the purpose of crossing over to Kingston. Hearing the firing, they returned back. The Wyoming people had by this time gone back, so that they did not meet. Next day (Thursday) they came into Windenute's fort (doubtless conducted in by some of the family) where were about 16 men, who were made prisoners; and then went to Jenkins' fort, about two miles above, where were a few men that surrendered.

The alarm spread quickly over the settlement, and the men collected at Fort-Fort, where was a company keeping garrison.

When it was proposed to go and give battle, Col. Butler thought it not advisable, but was overruled by the other officers, who alleged that if they did not then go to battle, most of the men would go home to take care of their families which they could not get to Fort-Fort—and that the settlement would be destroyed, that if they went to battle, and were successful, the settlement would be saved.— Most of Friday was spent in this consultation, but in the afternoon the troops marched out, and found the Indians at Windenute's fort, about 4-2 miles from Fort-Fort. The battle commenced sun about an hour and a half high. It was on a pine plain of 80 or 100 rods wide; on the right the flats 60 or 30 rods wide —on the left a thick swamp, supposed to be nearly impassable. After the firing had continued some time, with fluttering prospects of success, a body of Indians forced their way through the swamp, and began firing on the rear of the left. Colonel Dennison, who commanded there ordered the men to fall back in order to repel this new attack, and unhappily made use of the word retreat. In the meantime no intelligence of this was communicated to the rest, and the men broke off by degrees, as they found the firing in their rear; consequently they were wheeled round, and had no retreat but into the flats and river, where they were slain in their scattered condition, without being able to make any effective resistance. About 360 marched out, and only 60 escaped. The next day was spent in adjusting articles of capitulation, the conditions of which were that the fort and settlement should be surrendered to his majesty's troops—that they should be protected in their persons and property, and that they should not bear arms against his majesty during the war—that whatever provisions should be necessary for the king's troops should be paid for at a fair price—three Indians that were prisoners in the fort to be set at liberty, together with Samuel French, who was also a prisoner.

On Sunday the fort opened their gates and the enemy marched in—directly after which a merciless and indiscriminate plunder took place; even taking clothes off the people, and scarcely leaving enough to cover their nakedness—driving off all the cattle and horses, and burning the buildings—in fact destroying the whole settlement, but not killing the people. Between the time of the battle and the surrender of the fort, all the people below the fort and on the other side of the river, fled off as they could.
Two men that were going out on the Lackawaxen road, who had a yoke of oxen that had been previously taken from one of the Tories living up the river, were killed by some Indians, supposed to have been hired so to do by said Tories. These two men were the only persons killed by the Indians at the destruction of the settlement, after the battle—I could relate many particulars about those transactions, but refrain —my only object being to give a just statement of that unhappy affair. The Indians and their worse than they were bad enough, and deserve to be remembered with horror, but ought not to be accused of what they did not do. They did not massacre men, women and children in the fort, after they surrendered—but they took away and destroyed every thing valuable contrary to express stipulations. C. H.
Arkport, June, 1827.

A certain person in Scotland, not long since, who followed the business of pilfering from his neighbors, made it a constant rule after stealing, to pray for forgiveness; a gentleman, passing by one day, seeing him come out of a house judged he had been stealing, and was determined to follow him, he went some distance, and made a stop at the side of a stone wall, kneeled down and said, "O Lord, I pray if I have done any thing amiss in stealing these goods, that thou wouldst command this wall to fall down and crush me to death." A person being behind the wall, and hearing the fellow's prayer, threw the wall over, and broke one of his arms; the poor fellow lifted up his eyes and said, "Dear Lord, I cannot speak a word in jest, but what thou takest it in earnest."

A Snag Fortune. A German journal says, that the late king of Saxony has left to the princess Augusta, his only unmarried daughter, a fortune of 13 millions of dollars, (3 millions sterling), from his own private fortune.

[What a very industrious man the king must have been to have earned, by honest labor, so large a fortune for one of his daughters!! But—hundreds of thousands of times have the honest and deserving went supperless to bed, that this fortune might be accumulated; and yet the late king of Saxony was among the best of the big leeches which Providence permits to fatten upon the sweat and blood of mankind.] Niles.

Cure for Felons—Take quick, or un-slacked lime, slack it in soap, bind on a plaster of it the size of a small bean, change it every half hour for three hours.
This will draw it out, and leave the bone and joint perfectly sound. Having tried the experiment on myself and others and never having known it to fail, I think it may be recommended to the public.

lowing history of the Ministers of Great Britain, from the Conquest to the Reformation, viz:—Died, by the halber, 3—

Gaming.—A traveller who was solicited by friends to relate his adventures, observed: "I have seen during my travels, a very strange set of beings, who often sit together whole nights, without the attraction of any thing to gratify the appetite. At times they utter inarticulate sounds, without meaning or connexion, rolling their eyes in the oddest manner at each other. On other occasions, their countenances are marked with the horrid expression of the most malignant passions." Heavens! exclaimed the hearers of the story, what can be the object of these unhappy wretches? Are they servants of the public? No! Are they in search of the philosopher's stone? No!
Of the perpetual motion, perhaps? No!
Then they are sent thither in order to repent, and atone for their crimes! No!
"You are much deceived my friends as ever"—They must then be madmen!— Good God! What in the name of wonder can employ them! "I'll tell you friends—Gaming!"

Water Spout.—A water spout fell on St.
Mary's Church, Bungay, Suffolk, England, during afternoon service lately, and the Churchyard was so filled with water that it ran into the church; which, in a few minutes was upwards of a foot in depth. The congregation became so alarmed that they rushed out of their pews into the aisles and in the bustle many were thrown down in the water. At two hundred yards distance scarcely a drop of rain was perceptible.

An account in the Philadelphia Aurora, of various accidents in water frolics on the Delaware on the 4th inst. by the sudden storm of bad day, has the following finale.
"We conclude the chapter of accidents with one of a more joyful nature. While Capt.

Limer, of the sloop Hiram, with his wife and company, were enjoying an aquatic excursion in front of the fort, they were suddenly, and rather unexpectedly joined by a little stranger, who without loss of time, tried his weak voice in praise of the day. They called him Hiram, after the name of his birth place. The lady was speedily removed to more comfortable quarters, and is doing well, considering the strange events of the day.
If the lady cannot keep a better reckoning she ought never to go to sea. The Captain, too, cannot do very good at an observation.
