

MISCELLANY.

From the Indiana Journal.

The Brandywine.

The bark was on the stilly stream,
With starry banner spread—
And quick as lightning's winged beam
That vessel gaily sped;
And rose the shout of mirth and glee,
And echoed many a song—
It was an hour of revelry,
Amid that joyous throng.
And still another spirit came
With fire and tempest dark,
And dashing wave and rolling flame
Were on that gallant bark;
And darker grew the murky cloud,
And ever and anon
Still pealed beneath the fiery shroud
The deep-toned minute-gun.
And where is now the sparkling eye,
And where the joyous brow;
The shout that rose in gladness high—
The song, where is it now?
That eye is closed, that brow is cold,
That joyous shout is past,
The gladness of that heart is told,
The song is on the blast.

They waited not for shroud or bier,
No parting hymn was sung—
And fell not there the silent tear,
No funeral knell was rung;
But dying groan and dying shriek
Were floating on the air,
And where the mangled bodies reek
Was said the hurried prayer.

They parted not as others part,
No kind farewell was said;
But many hath been the aching heart
For many a spirit fled;
And by that gallant vessel's light,
Full many found a grave,
And many a heart went down that night
Beneath the coral wave.

ADELLE.

The Ghost of the Cellar.

A gentleman on Long Island, was very much vexed by the conduct of his colored servants, who used frequently to be absent from their duty, and engaged in frolics at a house, in the neighborhood, occupied by blacks. Near the negro house was an old cellar, and on this foundation the gentleman laid a plan to cure his servants of their bad habits. One evening, when they were absent from home, frolicking as usual, he provided himself with a sheet, and repaired to the ruined cellar, where having doctored himself in ghostly fashion, he lay concealed and waited for the breaking up of the company.

About the witching time of night, when spirits from the other world usually make their appearance, the colored party began to disperse. As they issued from the house, full of frolic and whiskey, the fictitious ghost rose slow and solemn from the cellar, and lifting up his hands, beckoned the blacks towards him. But as no words were uttered, no individual felt himself particularly bound to obey; and they all ran, some one way and some another, as if Satan himself, or some other negro driver, was close to their heels.

"Gosh a mighty!" said Caesar, as soon as he and his companions had got safely over the threshold of their master's kitchen, and closed the door behind them. "Gosh a mighty! Phillis, what a ghost dat was! Did you see him, Phillis? Why, he was as tall as de top of de house, and white as a sheet."

"Yes, Caesar," said Phillis, turning up the white of her eyes in awful wonder; "Yes, Caesar, and did you see wat dreadful teet he had, and how he smashed 'em at us wen he ris out of de sulfer?"

"Dat I did, Phillis," replied Caesar; "I seed 'em by gor—"

"Don't swear, Caesar."

"Did I swear, Phillis? Den hebben for-gib me all my sin; but I'm sartin his teet was as long as my arm—hebben help me, if so be I ebbet get into his mou!"

"And me too, Caesar," said the trembling Dinah, who was scarcely yet able to speak from very fright—

"An' did you see wat mon'sous eyes he had? Dey was as big—Oh lod! as big—"

"As a sasser, ebbery bit and grain," said Sambo, who now ventured to speak for the first time.

"Yes, I be sworn," said Caesar, ebery inch on 'em as big as a sasser—an' did you see how dey shined like ball of fire?"

"Oh lod! and brighter too," said Dinah—I'm sure I could see to pick up a pin by 'em in de darkest night eber was afore."

"Yes, dat you might," said Phillis, and seed a cambric needle too, plain as day. And did you see, Dinah, wat 'norous arns he had, and how he swing 'em about as if he kitch us all in one hand!"

"I'm sartin he would a kitch me," said Sambo, shuddering at the very recollection, "if I hadn't been a light heeled feller."

"You a light heeled feller?" said Caesar, who valued himself on his own agility—you flatty foot nigger, you—by gor—"

"Wat, again, Caesar!" said Phillis, clapping her hand on his mouth, "hab'nt I check you once a-ready for swearin?"

"Did I swear agin, Phillis? Hebben for-gib all my sins dis night, I say; and your'n too, Phillis; and your'n Dinah; and your'n Sambo; for one or tudder on us'll hab to go—and witch it is I cant tell; so hebben for-gib us all, I say."

"Amen! say I," shouted Dinah.
"Amen!" shouted Phillis.
"Amen!" g oaned Sambo.

"I'm sure one or tudder on us be call for," resumed Caesar, "and witch it is I don't know. Sambo, you're de greatest sinner."

"I? Caesar? I de greatest sinner?—How can you assassinate such a ting?"

"Yes Sambo," repeated Caesar, coolly, "You're de greatest sinner. Didn't you teal massa's wiskey last week, and wen you draw out de wiskey, didn't you put in a jug of water, so massa needn't miss 'em?"

"True, Caesar, returned Sambo, 'but wat all, dat sinnify? Habbn't you tole many a ting in your life time?—Recollekt now, and tink ober your sins. Didn't you teal massa's fowls lass tanksgibbin, to hab a high up dare over to Cuffy's? and didn't you teal massa's dry wood for to roast 'em by on de same 'casion? And didn't you teal—"

"Don't mention 'em, Sambo!" interrupted Caesar, "now I beg on ye.—Your recollec-shun is too bad—I did not tink 'you had sich dam memory afore. After all, Sambo, I don't tink eider you or me be de greatest sinners in de world. Here be Phillis and Dinah now, bieger sinners dan you or me, Sambo."

"How can you say so, Caesar?" returned Phillis, lifting up her eyes to heaven. "Don't I tend meeting ebery Sunday night, constant as de night comes? And don't I shout and sing and holler amen, loud as any on 'em? and don't—"

"Sartin, sartin, Phillis," said Caesar, "you do all dat and more. You tend meeting long of odder niggers; you shout and make great noise—but recollekt, Phillis, where I kitch you long of dat nigger Cato—"

"I be stonish, Caesar, you should mention dat little circumstance."

"Berry, spicuous dat Phillis—berry 'spicuous."

"Do hole your tongue, Caesar, and inflekt seriously bout your own sins fore you 'cuse me?"

"Cuse you, Phillis wy? dat's not one half your sins. Recollekt how you—"

"Hush! hush! Caesar! don't let us 'cuse one anoder."

"Ah, Phillis, you must be de greatest sinner 'mong us all, and if I hab any judgment, you must be de one wat is call for dis so-lum 'casion."

"Heben hab massa on us!" exclaimed Phillis, "mass I bear 'em all? and here be Dinah, shall she scape?"

"Don't mention me, Phillis," said Dinah; "I'm sure I hab no sin to answer for."

"Wat! Dinah," replied Phillis, "you nassy wench you? Do you pretend to say you hab no sin to answer for? fie! Oh fie! how dis ere world's gibbin to lyin! Didn't you teal massa's pies and cakes to hab a high up ober to Cuffy's lass tanksgibbin?"

"And didn't you helf 'em, Phillis?" retorted Dinah; "and isn't de undertaker worse 'an de tief—ha!"

"And didn't you," resumed Phillis, "teal massa's sugar and tea on de same 'casion?"

"And didn't you helf drink 'em, ha! Phillis? If I do take wat is not my own sometimes, I nebbet was kitcht wid de nigger Cato."

"Tut! tut!" said Phillis, who by this time began to be heartily sick of the turn which the discussion was taking, "tut! tut! Dinah, we're all in de wrong to 'cuse one anoder, in dis terrible pickle, wen may be we mus all hab to go; so we'd better forget and for-gib.—Wat say you Dinah? and you, Caesar? and you Sambo?"

"Wid all my heart and soul," replied Caesar, who like Phillis, finding himself as deep in the mud as the others were in the mire, was also glad to drop the subject. "Wat say you Sambo—can you for-gib me for call you flatty foot nigger?"

"Gib us your hand Caesar," said the placable Sambo; "and gib us your'n, Phillis. Said de equally forgiving Dinah, neither of whom could feel in their hearts to bear malice on so awful an occasion."

"I'm sure some on us be come for," said Caesar; "dat awful gloss nebbet come for notting, and wedder it be you, Sambo, or you Phillis, or you, Dinah, or wedder it be me, hebben only knows nottin about it. Wherefore let us 'pent of all our sins, wedder of remission or intermission, and for-gib one and all mankind."

"Yes," said Phillis, "let us now inflekt seriously on our latter ends."

A general shout of amen! followed. The blacks retired to rest, and were haunted with imaginary ghosts all night long, and for several of the succeeding nights. The impression was so strong, that from that time forth they never met at the house of Cuffy, nor pilfered their master's property, or were guilty of any great irregularities of conduct.

Nimrod Wildfire, who took a Steam Boat through the woods, up Ohio, has literally been beat. A Steam Boat coming up the Ohio, during the late flood, actually got lodged in the top of a tree, and the Captain had to cut his way through!

A whole hog.—The Portland Courier says, "a hog was killed yesterday, raised by Col. Jeremiah Bailey, which weighed, after it was dressed, 954 pounds! Pretty well for 'down east.'" Let old Kentucky beat this if she can.—Well, well, friend Smith, if old "Caintuck" cannot go a bigger hog, Ohio is what can.

People's Pal.

A neat repartee. "Pray, sir," said a young lady to the keeper of a circulating library, "have you Man as he is?" "No, madam," replied the other, wishing to accommodate her, and with no other meaning, "but we have Woman as she should be!"

ANECDOTE. A worthy old sea Captain of our acquaintance, once took on board a large number of passengers at a port in the Emerald Isle, to bring to this country. On approaching our coast, he, as usual, sounded, but found no bottom. "And did ye strike de ground, Captain?" enquired one of the Irishmen. "No," was the reply. "And will ye be so good as to tell us," rejoined Pat, "how near ye came to it?"

New Bedford Gaz.

Lord Byron, on receiving the intelligence that Lord Castleragh had cut his throat, remarked, "it is the best thing he has ever done for his country!"
