

From the Statesman.

HOME.

I have no sweet Home, nor dear friend that I know,
In whom to repose, when my heart's full of wo,
I wander an exile, forsaken I roam,
And weep for the loss of my friend, my home.
Home, Home, sweet, sweet Home,
Tho' I wander an exile, I oft think on Home.
When I think on the fair happy land of my birth,
And view the bright scenes of my childhood and mirth,
For a moment transported, I seem to be there,
And drink of the pleasures that joy used to wear.
Home, Home, &c.

But alas! 'tis a vision, a dream of the brain,
That I dare not indulge, lest I slumber again,
Whilst a hope still consoles me wherever I roam,
May in kind Heaven find a friend and a home.
Home, Home, sweet, sweet Home,
Tho' I wander an exile, I oft think on Home.

DAYS OF ABSENCE.

Days of absence sad and dreary,
Cloth'd in sorrow's dark array—
Days of absence I am weary,
One I love is far away.

Hours of bliss too quickly vanish,
When will aught like you return?
When this heavy sigh be banish'd,
When this bosom cease to mourn?

Not till that lov'd voice can greet me,
Which so oft hath charm'd mine ear;
Not till that sweet eye can meet me,
Telling that I still am dear.

Days of absence, then will vanish,
Joy will all my pangs repay;
Soon my bosom's idol banish,
Gloom but felt when he's away.

All my love is turned to sadness,
Absence pays the tender vow,
Hope that fill'd the heart with gladness,
Memory turns to anguish now.

Love may yet return to greet me,
Home may take the place of pain,
And Daniel D— with kisses greet me,
Breathing love and peace again.

THE FARMER.

Of all pursuits by man invented,
The ploughman is the best contented.
His calling's good, his profits high,
And on his labor all rely.
Mechanics all by him are fed,
Of him the merchants seek their bread;
His hands give meat to every thing,
Up from the beggar to the king.
The milk and honey, corn and wheat,
Are by his labor made complete.
Our clothes from him must first arise,
To deck the fop, to dress the wise;
We then by vote may justly state,
The ploughman ranks among the great.
More independent than them all,
That dwell upon this earthly ball,
All hail, ye farmers, young and old!
Push on your plough with courage bold;
Your wealth arises from your clod,
Your independence from your God.
If then the plough supports the nation,
And men of frank in every station,
Let kings to farmers make a bow,
And every man procure a plough.

BRYAN O'LYNN.

Can any body tell us where we may find the rest
Of this capital old ballad? There ought to be some ten or twelve verses in all; and we have a great curiosity to know how Bryan O'Lyinn and his wife and mother escaped drowning.

Bryan O'Lyinn had no coat to put on,
He borrow'd a goat skin to make him one;
He plucked the horns right under his chin,
They'll answer for pistols, says Bryan O'Lyinn.

Bryan O'Lyinn had no breeches to wear,
So he bought him a sheep-skin to make him a pair,
With the skinny side out and the woolly side in,
They're nice, light, and cool, says Bryan O'Lyinn.

Bryan O'Lyinn had no watch for to bear,
So he got him a turnip and scoop'd it out fair,
He then put a cricket clane under the skin,
They'll think it's a ticking, says Bryan O'Lyinn.

Bryan O'Lyinn went to bring his wife home,
He had but one horse, that was all skin and bone;
I'll put her before me, as nate as a pin,
And her mother behind me, says Bryan O'Lyinn.

Bryan O'Lyinn, and his wife, and the mother,
Were all going over the bridge together,
The bridge broke down and they all tumbled in,
We'll find ground at the bottom, says Bryan O'Lyinn.

Holding the Bear.—Two men, neighbors, in the then District of Maine, had been in the woods during the day and returning towards evening, when within a mile of their homes, observed a large bear making directly for one of them, and to avoid his grasp he dodged behind a sizeable tree, the bear sprang and clamping his forepaws around the tree, the man immediately seized them and held him fast. After a consultation how they should despatch the bear, it was agreed that the man who was at liberty should proceed home, obtain an axe, return again immediately and despatch him. The man arrived home, related the situation of their neighbor to his wife and his plan for killing the bear—but not being in much of a hurry, directed his wife to prepare supper, and he would take some before he started, which was accordingly done. After supper was over, and he taking several turns from the fire to the door, and from the door to the fire, and lounging a while, concluded he would go to bed early and be stirring by times in the morning and release his friend. Morning arrived, the axe got in readiness—he then tells his wife he believed he would have his breakfast before he went—breakfast being over and several small chores done about the house, he leisurely shoulders his axe, and shortly finds his friend in the same position very patiently holding the bear and waiting his return. On his approaching near the spot and just raising the axe to give the mortal blow, his friend says, stop, I have suffered enough holding the bear, you come and take my place and let me have the satisfaction of killing him. This was readily assented to, and the man after being released, and his neighbor in the situation, that he had been, shoulders the axe and walks off, leaving his friend in full possession of the bear in his turn.

Stray Bull.—A newspaper, printed in the interior of Ohio, says, that the wife of Mr. Bull advertises for his return. She is fearful he is straying in strange pastures!

Confession of Murder.—A few days ago a man died in the vicinity of Ellettsville, who, on the point of death, confessed his having committed a murder twenty years ago, for which a blacksmith, named Preston, was soon after tried, convicted, and executed. The murder was committed on two aged people, named Francis Bruce and Ann Taylor, who resided at Langford, near Drayton. The murder took place on a Sunday evening. The next morning the deceased were found with their throats cut, and the guilt of Preston was established by a chain of circumstantial evidence. He was known to be poor, and was seen running from the scene of the murder on the evening it took place; the next morning he exhibited a handful of gold and bank notes. A stick and a hammer, with which the old man's skull was fractured, were proved to have been borrowed. No doubt was, therefore, entertained of his guilt. When on the scaffold he denied any participation in the murder, but admitted his share in the robbery. It now appears, from the confession of the dying man, that Preston watched at the door while the murder and robbery were committing; but counselled the robbery should be committed without violence, and was ignorant that the murder had been committed. The murder was perpetrated by two other men, one of whom was the dying man, whose conscience sought relief in the disclosure.
London paper.

Barbarous punishment.—A wretched negress, who was condemned to death, during the winter's sojourn at Boni, by something like a jury of old men, was brought out for execution. She was rubbed with honey from head to foot, and then lashed to the trunk of a gum-tree. In this state, swarms of musquitoes and venomous insects instantly lodged themselves in her ears, nostrils, and eyes, and, attacking her breast inflicted the most horrible torture upon her. Two days afterwards the body of the unfortunate woman was become a mere misshapen mass, covered with myriads of bleeding insects. The name given to this species of punishment by the natives themselves, is the mosquito Tree.—Corbiere's Narrative of a visit to the Western Coasts of Africa.

HUMAN LIFE.

Divine Providence has been pleased in his infinite wisdom to appoint the condition of man upon earth neither perfectly happy nor entirely miserable. A state of life the reverse of this would be inconsistent with the power of free agency and hostile to the probationary allotment which heaven has assigned as the reward of our good or evil actions. The life of man is at best a vain illusion, uncertain and chequered by the revolution of events fraught with good and evil; he frequently complains of its brevity yet constantly acts as though he thought it much too long.

Oh man! when wilt thou learn wisdom? When wilt thou profit by the experience of thy ancestors? We hear men boasting of their reasoning faculty, their intellectual superiority, but alas! how little do their actions assimilate to their aspiring pretensions.

Man, from the very circumstance of his being endowed with reason, is in many respects the most unreasonable of animals; we see him at one moment extolling the advantages of universal freedom, at another, inflicting the cruellest scourges upon his prostrate slave, here he is to be seen inculcating the necessity of temperance, at the very time he is voluntarily depriving himself of his sober senses and thus sinking himself beneath the level of the brute condition.

Every object to the reflecting mind serves to convince man that this earth is not his proper home. The constant vicissitudes of seasons, the corresponding bloom and the decay of nature, alike point out to him the insignificant and transitory tenor of all sublunary things. We appear upon the earth a little while, act our respective parts and are precipitated into the interminable ocean of eternity. Alas! for what does man undertake wars, amass riches at every sacrifice, cross seas and endure every danger and privation that he is capable of enduring to accomplish his ends, and to ruin and destroy the happiness of his race, to war on his own life to gratify the passions of posterity, who perhaps are only reminded by the silent tombstone that he once lived, and that they are indebted to his laborious toils for the blessings which they enjoy. The summum bonum or greatest enjoyment this world can afford is to be derived from the habitual practices of virtue and as we have but a short time to live in this world an eternity at stake in that to come, our true interests both now and hereafter indicate to us that not only our duty, but that every good affection and encouragement, which can be supposed to influence the heart of man, equally persuade us to the pursuit of virtue and the abhorrence of vice.

Sentiments of De Witt Clinton.—"Pleasure is a shadow; wealth is vanity; and power a pegeant; but knowledge is extatic in enjoyment—perennial in fame—unlimited in space, and infinite in duration.

In the performance of its offices, it fears no danger—spurs not expense—looks in the volcano—dives into the ocean—perforates the earth—wings its flight into the skies—enriches the globe—explores sea and land; contemplates the distant; examines the minute; comprehends the great; ascends to the sublime; no place too remote for its grasp; no heavens too exalted for its reach.

STATE OF INDIANA: DEARBORN COUNTY, DEARBORN CIRCUIT COURT,

David Tibbetts } SEPTEMBER TERM, 1833.

John T. Bishop, } On complaint in Chancery.

Now comes the complainant aforesaid, by Major & Lane, his attorneys, and files his bill of complaint against said defendant, praying that defendant be compelled to make complainant a title to a certain tract of land in the said bill described, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court, by due proof now here in court made, that John T. Bishop, the defendant aforesaid, is not now a resident of the State of Indiana; it is therefore ruled and ordered by the court, now here in Chancery sitting, that notice of the pendency of said bill of complaint be published for four weeks successively, in some public newspaper printed in Lawrenceburg, notifying said defendant, that unless he appear here on the first day of the next March term of this court, and file his answer, or demur to said bill, the same will be taken as confessed, and a decree entered thereon accordingly. By the court.
