Eagerness of Blind Pupils Delight of Music Instructor

MISS FRIEDA HEIDER.

In her ceaseless efforts to enable the students of the blind institute to "see" the wonderful value of a musical education and in her daily patience in teaching these sightless ones to play the piano and sing, Miss Frieda Heider, a music teacher, has found an unusual joy.

"These blind pupils I have found are the most interesting, progressive, impulsive pupils of my list," declared Miss Heider.

That the blind boys and girls, denied the use of one of the most essential senses, become better students of music than those who see, Miss Heider says, is due to a number of reasons.

"The picture shows and the theater, the various amusements that must be seen do not lure these little children of the darkness away from their lessons and their practice hours, and perhaps this devotion to their musical education may be accounted for by the perversity of fate," Miss Heider insisted.

Miss Heider, a graduate of Manual Training High school, likes to study the progress of her blind pupils, and she derives much satisfaction in the progress of her charges. She gives about thirty lessons a week at the blind institution.

George S. Wilson, superintendent of the blind institution, praised the work of Miss Heider at the institution.

Those Who Work Under Artificial Lights

Will find that a lens with a very light shade of green, will throw off all the harmful rays that come from artificial lights.

We grind the lenses in our own plant, and the color is so light that it can't be detected unless the glasses are laid on a white piece of paper.

We will be glad to demonstrate these glasses.
